TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

THE LORD JUSTICE

SIR EDWARD E. KAY

THE NINTH EDITION OF THIS WORK

IS

BY PERMISSION

MOST RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED.

PREFACE.

In the preparation of the present Edition of this work for the press, which has been entrusted to him by the executrix of the late Mr. F. A. Lewin, the Editor has sought to observe the lines laid down in the preparation of previous Editions. Mr. F. A. Lewin had annotated the book down to the time of his death, in the year 1887, and the work so done by him has been carefully preserved, and, wherever practicable, embodied in the present Edition.

The passing of the Trust Investment Act, 1889, and the course of judicial decision under the provisions of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, have necessitated the rearrangement of the two chapters dealing with the subjects of investments and the rights of married women; but with these exceptions, the existing arrangement of the work has been retained intact.

The Appendix has been enlarged by the introduction of those provisions of the Lunacy Acts, 1890 and 1891, which are substituted for the repealed sections of the Trustee Acts of 1850 and 1852; but, as the important provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888, have been fully noticed in the body of the work, and can readily be found by a reference to the Index, it has been deemed unnecessary to reproduce them in the Appendix.

Every effort has been made to keep the book within reasonable dimensions, and in a few places it has been found practicable to omit matter which, by reason of alterations in the law, has been rendered practically obsolete; but the cases decided since the publication of the last Edition have been so numerous and important, that it has been impossible to prevent a considerable increase in the size of the present Edition.

In conformity with the course adopted in the two previous Editions, the matter introduced by the Editors, past and present, has been distinguished from the work of the Author by being inserted in square brackets [ ].

With a view to the convenience of members of the profession in using the book, the decisions of the Court of Appeal, reported in that series of the Law Reports which was concluded in December, 1890, have been referred to by the abbreviations "Ch. Div.," "Q. B. Div.," and "P. Div.," in lieu of the more compendious "Ch. D.," "Q. B. D.," and "P. D.," which have been reserved for the decisions of the Courts of First Instance.

The Charitable Uses and Mortmain Act, 1891, became law at too late a period of the session to admit of its provisions being noticed in the earlier pages of the work, where the provisions of the principal Act of 1888 are dealt with; but they have been fully referred to on later pages.

The asterisk prefixed to references to pages in the Table of Cases and in the Index of Statutes indicates those places in the book where the case, the statute, and the section in question have been more particularly referred to.

The grateful acknowledgments of the Editor are due to Mr. W. B. Megone, of the Chancery Bar, for his careful selection of the Irish cases referred to in the present Edition, and for valuable assistance rendered in the preparation of the Table of Cases, and during the whole time that the work was going through the press.

CECIL C. M. DALE.

18. At end of note (c) add "Re Tyler, 60 L. J. N.S. Ch. 686; 40 W. R. 7, where a gift to a charitable institution, subject to a condition that they should keep the testator's tomb in repair, with a gift over to another charity on default of compliance with the condition, was held valid."

60, note (e). After "Harrison v. Harrison, 2 H. & M. 237" add "Fuge v. Fuge, 27 L. R. Ir. 59."

65, lines 25 to 27. Dele from "Now" to "unchanged," and in place of the words deleted read as follows: By the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888, the statute 9 Geo. 2. c. 36 was repealed, and in lieu thereof it was enacted that every "assurance" of land (which expression includes testamentary gift) "to or for the benefit of any charitable uses" should be void unless made in accordance with the requirements of the Act of 1888. Now, however, by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), as respects the will of a testator dying after the passing of that Act (August 5th, 1891), land may, subject to the provisions of that Act (as to which see post, pp. 604, 971, 1083), be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use.

100, line 11. Insert the following paragraph:—

As regards assurances by the wills of testators dying subsequently to the 5th of August, 1891, the law has now been completely changed by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (referred to post, pp. 604, 971, 1083), which enacts, by sect. 5, that "land may be assured by will to or for the benefit of any charitable use," subject, however, to the requirement that land so assured shall be sold within one year from the death of the testator, or such extended period as in the Act mentioned. By sect. 7 it is provided that "any personal estate by will directed to be laid out in the purchase of land to or for the benefit of any charitable uses" shall "be held to or for the benefit of the charitable uses as though there had been no such direction to lay it out in the purchase of land," but (by sect. 8) the Court or Charity Commissioners may authorize the retention or acquisition by the charity of land so assured or directed to be purchased, if satisfied that such land is required for actual occupation for the purposes of the charity, and not as an investment.

The Act of 1891 (by sect. 3) repeals the definition of "land" contained in sect. 10 of the Act of 1888, and provides that "land" in both those Acts shall include tenements and hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, of any tenure, but not money secured on land or other personal estate arising from or connected with land; but (sect. 10) nothing in the Act of 1891 contained is to limit or affect the exemptions contained in the Act of 1888, or to apply to any land or personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of land acquired under any assurance to which such exemptions, or any of them, apply, or to exclude or impair any jurisdiction or authority which might otherwise be exercised by a Court or judge of competent jurisdiction or by the Charity Commissioners.

INTRODUCTORY VIEW

OF THE

RISE AND PROGRESS OF TRUSTS.

THE origin of trusts, or rather the adaptation of them to the English law, may be traced in part at least to the ingenuity of fraud. By the interposition of a trustee the debtor thought to withdraw his property out of the reach of his creditor, the freeholder to intercept the fruits of tenure from the lord of whom the lands were held, and the body ecclesiastic to evade the restrictions directed against the growing wealth of the church by the statutes of mortmain. Another inducement to the adoption of the new device was the natural anxiety of mankind to acquire that free power of alienation and settlement of their estates, which, by the narrow policy of the common law, they had hitherto been prevented from exercising. Origin of trusts.

Originally the only pledge for the due execution of the trust was the faith and integrity of the trustee; but the mere feeling of honour proving, as was likely, when opposed to self-interest, an extremely precarious security, John Waltham, Bishop of Salisbury, who was Lord Keeper in the reign of Richard the Second, originated the writ of subpœna, by which the trustee was liable to be summoned into Chancery, and compellable to answer upon oath the allegations of his cestui que trust. No sooner was this protection extended, than half the lands in the kingdom became vested in feoffees to uses, as trusts were then called. Thus, in the words of an old counsellor, the parents of the trust were Fraud and Fear, and a Court of Conscience was the Nurse (a). The subpœna.

Of trusts there were two kinds: the simple trust, and the special trust. The simple trust was defined in legal phraseology Trusts simple or special. Simple trust defined.

(a) Attorney-General v. Sands, Hard. 491.

to be, "a confidence, not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, and to the person touching the land, scilicet, that cestui que use should take the profit, and that the terre-tenant should execute an estate as he should direct" (a). In order rightly to understand what was meant by this rather technical description, we shall briefly consider the principles that were recognised by Courts of Equity (for these had the exclusive jurisdiction of trusts). First, with reference to the terre-tenant or feoffee to uses, and Secondly, with reference to the beneficial proprietor, or cestui que use.

Confidence in the person.

With respect to the feoffee to uses, it was at first held to be absolutely indispensable that there should be confidence in the person, and privity of estate. For want of the requisite of personal confidence it was ruled that a corporation could not stand seised to a use; for how, it was said, could a corporation be capable of confidence when it had not a soul? Nor was it competent for the king to sustain the character of trustee; for it was thought inconsistent with his high prerogative that he should be made responsible to his own subject for the due administration of the estate. And originally the subpœna lay against the trustee himself only, and could not have been sued against either his heir or assign; for the confidence was declared to be personal, and not to accompany the devolution of the property (b). But the doctrine of the Court in this respect was subsequently put on a more liberal footing, and it came to be held that both heir and assign should be liable to the execution of the use (c). An exception however was still made in favour of a purchaser for valuable consideration not affected by notice (d).

Privity of estate.

The meaning of privity of estate may be best illustrated by an example. Had a feoffment been made to A. for life to his own use, with remainder to B. in fee to the use of C., and then A. had enfeoffed D. in fee, in this case, though D. had the land by the feoffment, which then operated as a tortious conveyance, yet, as he did not take the identical estate in the land to which the use in favour of C. was attached, he was not bound by C.'s equitable claim. And, by the same rule, neither tenant by the curtesy, nor tenant in dower, nor tenant by elegit, was liable to the execution of the use, for their interests were new and original estates,

(b) 8 E. 4. 6; 22 E. 4. 6.
(c) The law as to the heir was altered by Fortescue, Ch. J. Bac. Ab. Uses and Trusts B.
(d) Bac. Ab. Uses and Trusts B.; and see 14 H. 8. 4, 7, 8.

and could not be said to have been impressed with the use. So the lord who was in by escheat, a disseisor, abator, and intruder, were not amenable to the subpœna; for the first claimed by title paramount to the creation of the use; and the three last were seised of a tortious estate, and held adversely to the feoffee to uses.

Privity as regards the cestui que use.

With respect to the cestui que use, the principle upon which his whole estate depended was also what in legal language was denominated privity. Thus, on the death of the original cestui que use, the right to sue the subpœna was held to descend indeed to the heir on the ground of hæres eadem persona cum antecessore; but the wife of the cestui que use, or the husband of a feme cestui que use, and a judgment creditor were not admitted to the same privilege; for their respective claims were founded not on privity with the person of the cestui que use, but on the course of law. And for the like reason a use was not assets, was not subject to forfeiture, and on failure of heirs in the inheritable line did not escheat to the lord.

Special trust defined.

The special trust (for hitherto we have spoken of the simple trust only) was where the conveyance to the trustee was to answer some particular and specific purpose, as upon trust to reconvey in order to change the line of descent, upon trust to sell for payment of debts, &c. In the special trust the duty of the trustee was not, as in the simple trust, of a mere passive description, but imposed upon him the obligation of exerting himself in some active character for the accomplishment of the object for which the trust was created. In case the trustee neglected his duty, the cestui que trust was entitled to file a bill in Chancery, and compel him to proceed in the execution of his office (a).

Trusts applicable to chattels.

Both the simple trust and the special trust were applicable to chattels real and personal, as well as to freeholds; but trusts of chattels were for obvious reasons much less frequently employed. The amount of the property was small; the owner, even without the interposition of a trustee, had the fullest control and dominion over it; and a chattel interest, as it followed the person, was equally subject to forfeiture whether in the custody of a trustee, or in the hands of the beneficial proprietor (b). But to the extent, whatever it was, to which trusts of chattels were adopted, they were administered upon the same principles, mutatis mutandis, as were trusts of freeholds; the right to sue a subpœna turned equally on privity (a), and the interest of the cestui que trust was held not to be assignable (b).

(a) See the case in the reign of Hen. 7. Append. to Sugden on Powers, No. 1.

(b) 5 H. 5. 3, 6.

Statutes affecting trusts.

Such was the nature of trusts as they stood at common law; but the manifold frauds and mischiefs to which the new system gave occasion, particularly "the great unsurety and trouble arising thereby to purchasers," called loudly from time to time for the enactment of remedial statutes. One of the most important of these was 1 Ric. 3, c. 1, the substance of which may be well expressed in the terms of the preamble, viz., that "all acts made by or against a cestui que use should be good as against him, his heirs, and feoffees in trust," in other words, that all dealings of the cestui que use with the trust property should have precisely the same legal operation, as if the cestui que use had himself possessed the legal ownership. To what interests the legislature intended this statute to apply has not on all hands been agreed. A feoffment in fee to uses was clearly the case primarily intended. Upon a feoffment in tail, it seems no use could have been declared, for a tenant in tail was incapacitated by the statute de donis from executing estates (c). With respect to a feoffment for life to uses, there appears to be no reason upon principle (except so far as the language of the Act may be thought to furnish any inference), and certainly there is no objection on the score of authority, why the cestui que use might not have passed the legal estate by virtue of the statutory power. It has been contended by Mr. Sanders, that on a feoffment for life no use grafted on the life-estate could have been declared, on the ground that as the tenant for life held of the reversioner, the consideration of tenure would have conferred a title to the beneficial interest on the tenant for life himself (d). But this reasoning can have no application where the estate for life was not created, but was merely transferred, for then the assignment of the life-estate was not distinguishable in this respect from a conveyance of the fee; in each case there was no consideration of tenure as between the grantor and grantee, but in each case the services incident to tenure were due from the grantee to a third person (1). It is clear that the statute

In what case a use might have been declared

(1) The state of the law upon this subject appears to have been as follows:—(1). On the creation of an estate for life, had no use been mentioned on the face of the instrument, the tenant for life had held for his own benefit in compen-

embraced uses of lands only, and did not extend either to special trusts, or to trusts of chattels: not to special trusts, because the trustee combined in himself both the legal estate and the use, though compellable in Chancery to direct them to a particular purpose; and not to trusts of chattels, because the preamble and the statute were addressed to cestui que use and his heirs, and to feoffees in trust.

The mischiefs of the system increasing more and more (the statute of Richard occasioning still greater evils than it remedied, from the facility it gave to the cestui que use and his feoffee, who had now each the power of passing the legal estate, of defrauding by collusion the bonâ fide purchaser), the legislature again interposed its authority by 27 Hen. 8. c. 10, and thereby annihilated uses as regarded their fiduciary character, by enacting, that "where any person stood seised of any hereditaments to the use, confidence, or trust of any other person, or of any body politic, such person or body politic as had any such use, confidence, or trust, should be deemed in lawful seisin of the hereditaments in such like estates as they had in use, trust, or confidence." (1) 27 H. 8. c. 10.

Uses by the operation of this statute became merged in the legal estate; but special trusts and trusts of chattels were not within the purview of the Act: the former, because the use, as Special trusts and trusts of chattels excepted from the statute.

sation for his services: Perk. s. 535; B. N. C. 60; Br. Feff. al. Uses, 10; and no use could have been averred in contradiction to the use implied. See Gilb. on Uses, 57. (2). Had a use been expressly declared by the deed, the tenant had been bound by the terms on which he accepted the estate: Perk. s. 537; Br. Feff. al. Uses, 10, 40; (3), unless a rent had been reserved, or consideration paid, in which case a court of equity would not have enforced the use against the purchaser for valuable consideration: B. N. C. 60; Br. Feff. al. Uses, 40. (4). On the assignment of a life estate a use might have been declared, as on a conveyance in fee. upon an estate for life.

(1) As this statute does operate on the use of a life estate, but does not apply to a seisin in tail, the doctrine of Mr. Sanders, that prior to 27 Hen. 8. there was no use of a seisin either in tail or for life, seems open to the following objections:—1. That the statute in executing the use of a life estate operates on an interest which at the time of the enactment had no existence; and, 2ndly, that in not executing a use declared on a seisin in tail, it operates differently on two estates falling, according to his view, within the same principle. To meet the former objection, Mr. Sanders holds the statute of Hen. 8. to be prospective, and distinguishes it from the statute of Richard, which he considers not to be prospective, by observing that the latter employs the word "use" only, while the former has the additional term of "trust"; but to this it may be answered, that, although the statute of Richard does not contain the word trust, the preamble does, and that the distinction contended for between use and trust had no existence until a comparatively late period. See Altham v. Anglesey, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 17. To obviate the latter objection, it is maintained by Mr. Sanders that tenant in tail is within the statute of Hen. 8.; an opinion which, it is submitted, is directly opposed to the general stream of authority: Co. Lit. 19, b.; Shep. Touch. 509; Gilb. on Uses, 11, and Lord St. Leonards' note, ibid. Objections to the doctrine that no use could have been declared upon an estate in tail or for life.

well as the legal interest, was in the trustee; the latter, because a termor is said to be possessed, and not to be seised of the property.

Introduction of the modern trust.

In the room of uses which were thus destroyed as they arose, the judges by their construction of the statute created a novel kind of interest, since distinguished and now known by the name of Trust. Before the statute of Hen. 8. a person, to have had the complete ownership, must have united the possession of the land and the use of the profits. The possession and the use were even at common law recognised as distinct interests, though the cestui que use was left to Chancery for his remedy (a). On a feoffment to A. to the use of B. to the use of C., the possession was in A., the use in B., and the limitation over to C. was disregarded as surplusage. When the statute of Hen. 8. was passed, it executed the estate in B. by annexing the possession to the use; but having thus become functus officio it did not, as the Act was construed, affect the use over to C. However, Chancery, now that uses were converted into estates, decreed C. to have a title in equity, and enforced the execution of it under the name of a trust (b).

Land, use, and trust, distinguished by Lord Hardwicke.

"Interests in land," said Lord Hardwicke, "thus became of three kinds: first, the estate in the land itself, the ancient common-law fee; secondly, the use, which was originally a creature of equity, but since the statute of uses it drew the estate in the land to it, so that they were joined and made one legal estate; and thirdly, the trust, of which the common-law takes no notice, but which carries the beneficial interest and profits in a court of equity, and is still a creature of that court, as the use was before the statute" (c).

Trusts not within statutes relating to uses.

This newly-created interest was held to be so perfectly distinct from the ancient use, that the statutory provisions by which many of the mischiefs of uses had been remedied, as the 19th Hen. 7. c. 15, by which uses had been made liable to writs of execution, and the 26 Hen. 8. c. 13, by which they had become forfeitable to the Crown for treason, were decided to have no application. However, the trust took the likeness of the use, conforming itself to the nature of special trusts and trusts of chattels, which had never been disturbed by any legislative enactment.

Trusts at first modelled after the pattern of uses.

To show how the principles of uses prevailed after the statute of Hen. 8., it was held in the reign of Elizabeth (a), that the equitable term of a feme covert did not vest in the husband by survivorship, for a trust, it was said, was a thing in privity, and in the nature of an action, and there was no remedy for it but by writ of subpœna. And a few years after in the same reign it was resolved by all the Judges that a trust was a matter of privity, and in the nature of a chose in action, and therefore was not assignable (b). And in the sixth year of King Charles the First it was decided by the Judges, that as a feme was dowable by act or rule of law, and a court of equity had no jurisdiction where there was not fraud or covin, the widow of a trustee was not bound by the trust, but was entitled beneficially to her dower out of the trust estate (c).

Improvements introduced by Lord Nottingham.

But during the reigns of Charles the First and Charles the Second, and particularly during the Chancellorship of Lord Nottingham, who, from the sound and comprehensive principles upon which he administered trusts, has been styled the father of equity (d), the Courts gradually threw off the fetters of uses and, disregarding the operation of mere technical rules, proceeded to establish trusts upon the broad foundation of conformity to the course of common law. "In my opinion," said Lord Mansfield, "trusts were not on a true foundation till Lord Nottingham held the great seal; but by steadily pursuing from plain principles trusts in all their consequences, and by some assistance from the legislature, a noble, rational, and uniform system of law has since been raised; so that trusts are now made to answer the exigences of families and all purposes, without producing one inconvenience, fraud, or private mischief, which the statute of Hen. 8. meant to avoid" (e).

Alterations made in trusts as regards the trustee.

As to the changes that were successively introduced, it was held with reference to the trustee, that actual confidence in the person was no longer to be looked upon as essential. A body corporate therefore was not exempted from the writ of subpœna on the ground of incapacity (f): and even the king, notwithstanding his high prerogative, was invested with the character of a Royal Trustee (g), though the precise mode of enforcing the trust against him was not exactly ascertained: to use the language of Lord Northington, "the arms of equity were very short against the Prerogative" (a). The subtle distinctions which had formerly attended the notion of privity of estate were also gradually discarded. Thus it was laid down by Lord Hale, that tenant in dower should be bound by a trust as claiming in the per by the assignment of the heir (b); and so it was afterwards determined by Lord Nottingham (c): and when an old case to the contrary was cited before Lord Jeffries, it was unanimously declared both by the bench and the bar to be against equity and the constant practice of the Court (d). A tenant by statute merchant was held to be bound upon the same principle, for he took, it was said, by the act of the party, and the remedy which the law gave thereupon (e). But as to tenant by the curtesy, Lord Hale gave his opinion, that one in the post should not be liable to a trust without express mention made by the party who created it; and therefore tenant by the curtesy should not be bound (f): but his Lordship's authority on this point was subsequently over-ruled, and curtesy as well as dower was made to follow the general principle.

As regards the cestui que trust.

With respect to the cestui que trust, or the person entitled to the subpœna, the narrow doctrine contained under the technical expression of privity began equally to be waived, or rather to be applied with considerable latitude of construction. "The equitable interest," said Justice Rolle, "is not a thing in action, but an inheritance or chattel, as the case may fall out" (g); and when once the trust, instead of passing as a chose in action, came to be treated on the footing of an actual estate, it soon drew to it all the rights and incidents that accompanied property at law: thus, the equity of the cestui que trust, though a bare contingency or possibility (h), was admitted to be assignable (i); and Witham's case, that a husband who survived his wife could not, for want of privity, claim her equitable chattel, was declared by the Court to be no longer an authority (j). So a judgment creditor, it was held by Lord Nottingham, might prosecute an equitable fieri facias (a); and though Lord Keeper Bridgman refused to allow an equitable elegit (b), it is probable, had the question arisen before Lord Nottingham, his Lordship would in this, as in other cases, have acted on a more liberal principle: at all events, the creditor's right to relief in this respect has since been established by the current of modern authority (c). Again, a trust was decided by Lord Nottingham to be assets in the hands of the heir (d); and though Lord Guildford afterwards held the other way (e), yet Lord Nottingham's view of the subject appears to have been eventually established (f). Curtesy was also permitted of a trust estate, though the widow of a cestui que trust could never make good her title to dower (g); "not," said Lord Mansfield, "on reason or principle, but because wrong determinations had misled in too many instances to be then set right" (h); or rather, as Lord Redesdale thought, because the admission of dower would have occasioned great inconvenience to purchasers —a mischief that in the case of curtesy was not to be equally apprehended (i).

Lord Mansfield's doctrines.

Lord Mansfield was for carrying the analogy of trusts to legal estates beyond the legitimate boundary. "A use or trust," he said, "was heretofore understood to be merely as an agreement, by which the trustee and all claiming from him in privity were personally liable to the cestui que use, and all claiming under him in like privity; nobody in the post was entitled under or bound by the agreement: but now the trust in this Court is the same as the land, and the trustee is considered merely as an instrument of conveyance" (j). And in the application of this principle his Lordship argued, that the estate of the cestui que trust was subject to escheat, and that on failure of heirs of the trustee, the lord who took by escheat was bound by the trust. But to these propositions the Courts of Equity have never yet assented (k). The limit to which the analogy of trusts to legal estates ought properly to be allowed was well enunciated by Lord Northington in the case of Burgess v. Wheate. "It is true," he said, "this Court has considered trusts as between the trustee, cestui que trust, and those claiming under them, as imitating the possession; but it would be a bold stride, and, in my opinion, a dangerous conclusion, to say therefore this Court has considered the creation and instrument of trust as a mere nullity, and the estate in all respects the same as if it still continued in the seisin of the creator of the trust, or the person entitled to it: for my own part I know no instance where this Court has permitted the creation of a trust to affect the right of a third person" (a) that is, to illustrate the principle by instances, a tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, or by elegit, as claiming through the cestui que trust or trustee, though in the post, is bound by and may take advantage of the trust; but according to the doctrine laid down by Lord Northington, the lord who comes in by escheat is not in any sense a privy to the trust, and therefore can neither reap a benefit from it on failure of heirs of the cestui que trust, nor is bound by the equity on failure of heirs of the trustee (b).

(a) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 250, 251.

(b) It is clear that [prior to 47 & 48 Vict. c. 71], the lord [could] not acquire an equitable interest by escheat: Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 177; Cox v. Parker, 22 Beav. 168; but whether a lord taking the legal estate by escheat shall or not be bound by the trust, has never been decided. See post, c. xii. s. 3. The Trustee Act, 1850, s. 15, enables the Court to make an order on failure of heirs of the trustee, but is the Crown bound by the Trustee Act? See note on second section of the Trustee Act, post. [See also 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 30.]

PART I.

DEFINITION, CLASSIFICATION, AND CREATION OF TRUSTS.

CHAPTER I.

DEFINITION OF A TRUST.

Definition of a trust.

As the doctrines of trusts are equally applicable to real and personal estate, and the principles that govern the one will be found mutatis mutandis, to govern the other, we cannot better describe the nature of a trust generally, than by adopting Lord Coke's definition of a use, the term by which, before the Statute of Uses, a trust (1) of lands was designated (a). A trust, in the words applied to the use, may be said to be "A confidence reposed in some other, not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral, annexed in privity to the estate of the land, and to the person touching the land, for which cestui que trust has no remedy but by subpœna in Chancery" (b).

(a) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 248, per Lord Keeper Henley; Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150, per Lord Hardwicke.

(b) Co. Lit. 272, b. Law and equity are now administered in all the courts alike. [For another definition, see Wilson v. Lord Bury, 5 Q. B. Div. 518, at p. 530.]

(1) That a trust was anciently known as a use, appears from the Merchant of Venice. Thus, when Shylock had forfeited one half of his goods to the State to be commuted for a fine, and the other half of his goods to Antonio, the latter offered that, if the Court, as representing the State, would forego the forfeiture of the one half, he (Antonio) would be content himself to hold the other half in use, that is, in trust for Shylock for life, with remainder, after Shylock's death, for Jessica's husband:—

> "So please my lord the duke, and all the court,
> To quit the fine for one half of his goods;
> I am content so he will let me have
> The other half in use,—to render it,
> Upon his death, unto the gentleman
> That lately stole his daughter."
>
> Merchant of Venice, Act IV., Scene I.

This interpretation clears Antonio's character from the charge of selfishness to which it would be exposed if he were to keep the half for his own use during his life.

A confidence.

1. It is "a confidence;" not necessarily a confidence expressly reposed by one party in another, for it may be raised by implication of law: and the trustee of the estate need not be actually capable of confidence, for the capacity itself may be supplied by legal fiction, as where the administration of the trust is committed to a body corporate; but a trust is a confidence, as distinguished from jus in re and jus ad rem, for it is neither a legal property nor a legal right to property (a).

Reposed in some other.

2. It is a confidence "reposed in some other;" not in some other than the author of the trust, for a person may convert himself into a trustee, but in some other than the cestui que trust; for as a man cannot sue a subpœna against himself, he cannot be said to hold upon trust for himself (b). If the legal and equitable interests happen to meet in the same person, the equitable is for ever absorbed in the legal. Thus, if A. be seised of the legal inheritance ex parte paternâ, and of the equitable ex parte maternâ, upon the death of A. the heir of the maternal line has no equity against the heir of the paternal (c). And the same rule prevails as to leaseholds for lives (d): as if the legal estate in a freehold lease be vested in a husband and his heirs, in trust for the wife and her heirs, the child who is the heir of both, and takes the legal estate ex parte paternâ, and the equitable estate ex parte maternâ, will, by the merger of the equitable in the legal, become seised both at law and at equity, ex parte paternâ, and the subsequent devolution will be regulated accordingly.

How far the equitable merges in the legal estate.

But this rule holds only where the legal and equitable estates are co-extensive and commensurate; for if a person be seised of the legal estate in fee, and have only a partial equitable interest, to merge the one in the other might occasion an injurious disturbance of rights. Thus before the Fines and Recoveries Act (e), if lands had been conveyed unto and to the use of A. and his heirs, in trust for B. in tail, with remainder in trust for A. in fee, had the equitable remainder limited to A. been converted into a legal estate, it would not have been barrable by B.'s equitable recovery (a)

In what sense mortgagee in fee is trustee for himself and his executors.

In the case of a mortgage in fee it [has been] said [that] a man and his heirs are trustees for himself and his executors (b). But the meaning was, that, until a release or foreclosure of the equity of redemption, the interest of the mortgagee was of the nature of personality, and passed on his death to his personal representative; the heir, therefore, took the estate upon trust for the executor (c). A release or foreclosure, unless it happen in the lifetime of the mortgagee, comes too late after his decease to alter the character of the property, for, as the tree falls, so it must lie (d).

Trust not issuing out of the land, but collateral to it.

3. A trust is "not issuing out of the land, but as a thing collateral to it." A legal charge, as a rent, issues directly out of the land itself, and therefore binds every person, whether in the per or post, whether a purchaser for valuable consideration or volunteer, whether with notice or without; but a trust is not part of the land, but an incident made to accompany it, and that not inseparably, but during the continuance only of certain indispensable adjuncts; for—

Annexed in privity to the estate.

4. A trust is "annexed in privity to the estate," that is, must stand or fall with the interest of the person by whom the trust is created; as, if the trustee be disseised, the tortious fee is adverse to that impressed with the trust, and therefore the equitable owner, until the fusion of law and equity, could not have himself sued the disseisor, but must have brought an action against him at law in the name of the trustee (e).

Extent of the term privity to the estate.

During the system of uses, and also while trusts were in their infancy, the notion of privity of estate was not extended to tenant by the curtesy, or in dower, or by elegit, or in fact to any person claiming by operation of law, though through the trustee; but in this respect the landmarks have been carried forward, and at the present day a trust follows the estate into the hands of every one claiming under the trustee, whether in the per or post. It was the opinion of Sir T. Clarke and Lord Northington, that a lord taking by escheat, as claiming by title paramount, and not either in the per or post, was not affected by any privity, and therefore could not be compelled to execute the trust (a). But this question was never actually decided, and has in great measure become immaterial (b).

Trust annexed in privity to the person.

5. A trust is "annexed in privity to the person." To entitle the cestui que trust to relief in equity it is not only necessary that he should prove the creation of the trust, and the continuance of the estate supporting it, but should also establish that the assign is personally privy to the equity, and therefore amenable to the subpœna. If it can be shown that the assign had actual notice, then, whether he paid a valuable consideration or not, he is plainly privy to the trust, and bound to give it effect; but if actual notice cannot be proved, then, if he be a volunteer, the Court will still affect him with notice by presumption of law; but if he be a purchaser for value, the Court must believe, until proved to the contrary, that, having paid for the estate, he was ignorant, at the time he purchased, of another's equitable title. A purchaser for valuable consideration without notice therefore is the only assign against whom privity annexed to the person cannot at the present day be charged (c).

No remedy of the cestui que trust but in Chancery.

6. The cestui que trust "has no remedy but by a subpœna in Chancery." And by chancery must be understood, not exclusively the court of the Lord Chancellor, but any court invested with an equitable jurisdiction, as opposed to common-law courts (d), and spiritual courts (a), neither of which until the fusion of law and equity had any cognisance in matters of trust. A common-law court could never, from the defective nature of its proceedings, have specifically enforced a trust; but at one time it affected to punish a trustee in damages for breach of the implied contract (b): an exercise of authority, however, clearly extra-provincial, and afterwards abandoned (c). Had a Spiritual court attempted to meddle with a trust, the Court of Queen's Bench might have been moved to issue a prohibition (d).

B. 157, the Court professed to proceed upon the legal right, so that the principle was not disturbed, though there may be a question how far the facts justified the assumption upon which the Court acted. In Roper v. Holland, 3 Ad. & E. 99, a cestui que trust recovered upon an action of debt for money had and received on proof of the admission by the trustee that he had a balance in hand for the plaintiff; and see Sloper

By 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, and 37 & 38 Vict., c. 83, it was enacted that as from 1st November, 1875 (inclusive), there should be "One Supreme Court of Judicature" consisting of "Her Majesty's High Court of Justice" and "Her Majesty's Court of Appeal," and the High Court of Justice was made to comprise five divisions, viz.: the Chancery Division, the Queen's Bench Division, the Common Pleas Division, the Exchequer Division, and the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division [but by Order in Council dated 16th December, 1880, under section 32 of the first-mentioned act, the Common Pleas Division and the Exchequer Division have been abolished.] 36 & 37 V. c. 66.

Equitable estates and rights are now to be noticed and acted upon in all the courts, and where there is any conflict between the rules of equity and the rules of common law, the rules of equity are to prevail. See sections 24 & 25 of the first-mentioned Act.

Subject to any rules to be made in pursuance of the new enactments, all causes and matters pending in the Court of Chancery at the commencement of the Act of 36 & 37 Vict., are transferred to the Chancery division of the High Court of Justice, and subject as aforesaid, all causes and matters for the execution of trusts, charitable or private, are to be assigned to the same division, and for that purpose every document by which the cause or matter is commenced is to be marked for that division, or with the name of the Judge to whom the cause or matter is to be assigned. CHAPTER II.

CLASSIFICATION OF TRUSTS.

Trusts simple or special.

1. THE first and natural division of trusts is into simple and special.

Simple trust.

The simple trust is where property is vested in one person upon trust for another, and the nature of the trust, not being prescribed by the settlor, is left to the construction of law. In this case the cestui que trust has jus habendi, or the right to be put into actual possession of the property, and jus disponendi, or the right to call upon the trustee to execute conveyances of the legal estate as the cestui que trust directs.

Special trust.

The special trust is where the machinery of a trustee is introduced for the execution of some purpose particularly pointed out, and the trustee is not, as before, a mere passive depositary of the estate, but is called upon to exert himself actively in the execution of the settlor's intention; as where a conveyance is to trustees upon trust to sell for payment of debts.

Special trusts either instrumental or discretionary.

2. Special trusts have again been subdivided into ministerial (or instrumental) and discretionary. The former, such as demand no further exercise of reason or understanding than every intelligent agent must necessarily employ; the latter such as cannot be duly administered without the application of a certain degree of prudence and judgment.

A trust to convey an estate must be regarded as ministerial; for, provided the estate be vested in the cestui que trust, it is perfectly immaterial to him by what manner of person the conveyance is executed.

Trust to sell held by Mr. Fearne to be instrumental.

A trust for sale was considered by Mr. Fearne as also ministerial; "for the price," he said, "is not arbitrary, or at the trustee's discretion, but to be the best that can be gotten for the estate, which is a fact to be ascertained independently of any discretion in the trustee" (a). But there is much room for judgment in the time and mode of proceeding to a sale, and the precautions that are taken will have a material influence upon the price; and Mr. Fearne's opinion cannot at the present day be maintained (a).

Examples of discretionary trusts.

A fund vested in trustees upon trust to distribute among such charitable objects as the trustees shall think fit (b), or an advowson conveyed to them upon trust to elect and present a proper preacher (c), is clearly a discretionary trust; for the selection of the most deserving objects in the first instance, and the choice of the best candidate in the second, is a matter calling for serious deliberation, and not to be determined upon without due regard to the merits of the candidates, and all the particular circumstances of the case.

Mixture of trust and power.

3. There is frequent mention made in the books of a mixture of trust and power (d), by which is meant, a trust of which the outline only is sketched by the settlor, while the details are to be filled up by the good sense of the trustees. The exercise of such a power is imperative, while the mode of its execution is matter of judgment and discretionary.

Distinguished from trust with power annexed.

A mixture of trust and power is not to be confounded with a common trust to which a power is annexed; for, in the former case, as in a trust "to distribute at the discretion of the trustees," they are bound at all events to distribute, and the manner only is left open; but in the latter case, the trust itself is complete, and the power, being but an accessory, may be exercised or not, as the trustee may deem it expedient; as where lands are limited to trustees with an authority to grant leases, or stock is transferred to trustees with a power of varying the securities; for in such cases the power forms no integral part of the trust, but is merely collateral and subsidiary, and the execution of it, in the absence of fraud, cannot be compelled by application to the Court.

Trusts lawful and unlawful.

4. Again, trusts may be divided, with reference to the object in view, into lawful and unlawful. The former, such as are directed to some honest purpose (as a trust to pay debts, &c.), which are called by Lord Bacon Intents or Confidences, and will be administered by the Court. The latter are trusts created for the attainment of some end contravening the policy of the law, and therefore not to be sanctioned in a forum professing not only justice but equity, as a trust to defraud creditors or to defeat a statute. Such are designated by Lord Bacon as Frauds, Covins, or Collusions (a).

(a) See King v. Bellord, 1 H. & M. 343; Robson v. Flight, 5 N. R. 344; S. C., 4 De G. J. & S. 608; Clarke v. Royal Panopticon, 4 Drew. 29.

(b) Attorney-General v. Gleg, 1 Atk. 356; Hibbard v. Lamb, Amb. 309; Cole v. Wade, 16 Ves. 27; Gower v. Mainwaring, 2 Ves. 87.

Trusts public and private.

5. Another division of trusts is into public and private. By public must be understood such as are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description. To this class belong all trusts for charitable purposes, and indeed public trusts and charitable trusts may be considered in general as synonymous expressions (b). In private trusts the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals who are, or within a certain time may be, definitely ascertained, and to whom, therefore, collectively, unless under some legal disability, it is, or within the allowed limit will be, competent to control, modify, or determine the trust. The duration of trusts of this kind cannot be extended by the will of the settlor beyond the bounds of legal limitations, viz., a life or lives in being with an engraftment of twenty-one years. A public or charitable trust, on the other hand, has for its objects the members of an uncertain and fluctuating body, and the trust itself is of a permanent and indefinite character, and is not confined within the limits prescribed to a settlement upon a private trust (c).

CHAPTER III.

OF THE PARTIES TO THE CREATION OF A TRUST.

Now that we have defined and distributed trusts, we shall next enter upon the creation of them: First, By the act of a party, and Secondly, By operation of Law. Upon the subject of the former class we propose to treat, First, Of the necessary parties to the creation of a trust; Secondly, What property may be made the subject of a trust; Thirdly, With what formalities a trust may be created; Fourthly, Of Transmutation of Possession; Fifthly What may be the object or scope of the trust; and Sixthly, In what language a trust may be declared.

In this chapter, we shall consider the necessary parties to a trust, under the three heads of the Settlor, the Trustee and the Cestui que trust.

SECTION I.

OF THE SETTLOR.

General power creating a trust.

1. As the creation of a trust is a modification of property in a particular form, it may be laid down as a general rule that whoever is competent to deal with the legal estate, may, if he be so disposed, vest it in a trustee for the purpose of executing the settlor's intention.

The Crown.

2. The sovereign, as to his private property, may, by letters patent, grant it to one person upon trust for another (a). But the trust must appear upon the face of the letters patent; for if the grant be expressed to be made to one person, a trust cannot be proved by parol in favour of another, for this would contradict the nature of the instrument which purports to be an act of bounty to the grantee (a). However, if the grant be to A. and his heirs with the limitation of a beneficial interest to A. for life only, a trust of the remainder will not pass to the grantee, but will result to the Crown, for the presumption of bounty as to the whole is rebutted by the declared intention as to the part (b).

Prizes.

All prizes taken in war vest in the sovereign, and are commonly by the royal warrant granted to trustees upon trust to distribute in a prescribed mode amongst the captors; but an instrument of this kind is held not to vest an interest in the cestuis que trust which they can enforce in equity, but it may at any time be revoked or varied at the pleasure of the sovereign before the general distribution (c). [The effect of such an instrument, though the words "in trust" be used, is merely to appoint the persons named to be the agents of the sovereign to effect the distribution (d).]

Will of the sovereign.

The Crown may also by will bequeath its private personal property to one person in trust for another, but the will must be in writing and under the sign manual (e), though the Probate Court has no jurisdiction to admit it to probate (f).

Corporations.

3. As to the power of Corporate Bodies to create a trust, it was competent to municipal corporations, before the Municipal Corporations Act (g), to alienate their property, and as a consequence to vest it in a trustee (h). But now municipal corporations are themselves trustees of their property, for the public purposes prescribed by the Municipal Corporations Act, and are debarred from alienating their real (i) or personal estate (j) without the consent of the Lords of the Treasury. A corporation, however, not included in the schedules to the Act still retains its power of alienation (k).

Feme covert.

4. A Feme Covert may create a trust of real estate, but, unless it be property settled to her separate use, it must be done with the consent of her husband, and there must be all the attendant formalities required by the Fines and Recoveries Act, 3 & 4 W. 4, c. 74, [as modified by the Conveyancing Act, 1882, 45 & 46

Vict. c. 39, s. 7. But under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (a), a woman married since the 31st Dec. 1882, and also a woman married before that date as to property acquired by her after that date, can create a trust of real estate without the concurrence of her husband and without the formalities of the Fines and Recoveries Act.]

5. As to her choses en action, by a recent statute (b) (commonly called Malins's Act), a feme covert is enabled with the concurrence of her husband, and on being separately examined in the manner prescribed by the Fines and Recoveries Act, to dispose by deed (c) of any future or reversionary interest created by an instrument made after the 31*st December*, 1857, and as to which interest her power of anticipation is not specially restricted; and is also authorized to release or extinguish her right or equity to a settlement out of personal estate to which she is entitled in possession, under such instrument as aforesaid. But any personal estate settled for her benefit upon the occasion of her marriage is excepted from the foregoing powers (d); and an appointment after the date of the Act, but in execution of a power of appointment amongst children created by a settlement of a previous date, is not within the Act (e). And as the interest must be created by an instrument a share of a feme covert as next of kin under an intestacy is not within the Act. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57.

[By an assignment under this statute the wife can transfer her future property "discharged from her husband's right, as fully and effectually as if she were a feme sole;" and "the assignment ought not to be regarded as that of the husband and wife according to their respective interests" (f). The concurrence of the husband will therefore be good, although there may be a right of retainer which would have been available as against him if he had been entitled to reduce the property into possession (g), or although he may have previously executed a creditors' deed or been adjudicated a bankrupt (h).]

Whether the Act applies to choses en action in possession.

It will be observed that the statutory power of disposition

[(a) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, ss. 2, 5.]

(b) 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57.

[(c) It may be open to doubt whether the modifications introduced by the Conveyancing Act, 1882, 45 & 46 Vict. c. 39, s. 7, apply to such a deed.]

given by Malins's Act to a feme covert extends in terms no further than to her future or reversionary interests not limited to her by her marriage settlement; and as to choses en action in possession, the feme covert, though enabled to waive her equity to a settlement, has no express power of absolute disposition given her. If therefore a feme covert be entitled to a chose en action in possession, and join with her husband in assigning it to a trustee, then if it be not reduced into possession during the coverture, and the wife survives, the question arises whether, though the formalities prescribed in the Act were complied with, she may not claim the fund by survivorship. The meaning of the framer of the Act probably was, that, as to choses en action to which a feme covert is entitled in possession, the husband can compel a transfer of them to himself, subject only to the wife's equity to a settlement, and as the Act enables a feme covert to waive her equity to a settlement, the husband and wife together can deal with such choses en action by making it imperative on the trustees to transfer the fund to the husband or his nominee.

Choses en action, &c., irrespectively of the Act.

6. The husband alone may create a trust of the wife's choses en action sub modo; that is, if they be reduced into possession during the coverture, the settlement will be unimpeachable, but if they remain choses en action at the death of the husband, the wife will be entitled to them by survivorship.

Chattels real.

As to the wife's equitable chattels real, the husband may, subject to the wife's equity to a settlement (a), create a trust of them jure mariti (b), unless the chattel be of such a nature that it cannot possibly fall into possession during the coverture (c).

[Recent alterations.]

[7. The above observations apply only to property which was acquired before the 1st of January, 1883, by women married before that date; as in all other cases the property vests in the wife, independently of her husband, and she has power to dispose or create a trust of it without his concurrence (d).]

Separate use.

8. As regards property settled to the separate use of a feme covert, she is to all intents and purposes considered a feme sole, as, if real estate be conveyed to a trustee and his heirs, or if personal estate be assigned to a trustee and his executors upon trust for the feme covert for her sole and separate use, and to be at her sole disposal as to the fee-simple in the one case and the absolute interest in the other, she has the entire control, and may exercise her ownership or implied power of appointment by creating a trust, extending even beyond the coverture. So if the feme covert be tenant for life to her separate use, she has full power to make a settlement of her whole life estate, and not during the coverture only. But in all cases where the power of anticipation is restrained, the feme covert can make no disposition of the property, except as to the annual produce which has actually become due (a). If a settlement be fraudulently procured from the wife by a husband by virtue of her separate use, it may be set aside (b).

9. The Married Women's Property Act, 1870 (c), enacted by sect. 1, that wages and earnings made by a married woman separately from her husband after the date of the Act (9th of Aug. 1870), were to be deemed settled to her separate use; and, by sect. 7, that where a woman married after the date of the Act was entitled to any personal property as next of kin, or to any sum not exceeding 200*l.*, under any deed or will, it should belong to her for her separate use; and, by the next section, that "rents and profits" of any real estate descending upon such married woman as heiress, should also belong to her for her separate use. [This Act has been repealed and its place supplied by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (d), which makes all property acquired after the commencement of the Act (1st of January, 1883), by women married before that date, and also all the property of women married after that date, their separate property.] 33 & 34 Vict. c. 93. [45 & 46 Vict. c. 75.]

10. If an Infant before the Fines and Recoveries Act had levied a fine or suffered a recovery, he might also have declared the uses (e), and unless the fine or recovery had been reversed by him during his nonage he had been bound by the declaration (f), but deeds have now been substituted for fines and recoveries, and every deed of an infant, whether under the Act or independent of it, either is void or may be avoided. Infants.

An infant until recently might have made a Feoffment, and at the same time have declared a use upon it, and both feoffment Feoffment.

and use were voidable only and not void (a); and by analogy the infant might also have engrafted a trust upon the legal estate; but a Court of equity would never have allowed any equitable interest to be enforced against the infant himself to his prejudice, but gave him the same power of avoidance over the equitable as he had over the legal estate, and if the infant had died without having avoided the trust, the Court would still have investigated the transaction, and seen that no unfair advantage was taken (b).

Custom of Kent.

An infant may by the custom of Kent for valuable consideration certainly, and, according to the better opinion, even without value (c), make a feoffment at the age of fifteen, and upon such feoffment he may declare uses (d). But a Court of equity would no doubt confine such a custom within its narrowest bounds, and as trusts have sprung into being since the statute of Hen. 8, might hold the custom to be void as of recent growth in respect of the equitable interest, and at all events would not allow the custom to be made an instrument of fraud.

Wills Act.

Before the Wills Act (e) an infant of the age of fourteen years might have bequeathed his personal estate, and therefore might have created a trust of it by will; but now, as regards personal as well as real estate, every testator must be of the age of twenty-one years.

Lunatics.

11. Lunatics or Idiots might, before the Fines and Recoveries Act, have levied a fine or suffered a recovery, and the uses declared would have been valid until the fine or recovery was reversed. The deed of a lunatic or idiot may be void or not according to circumstances (f). The feoffment of a lunatic or idiot, while the feoffment operated tortiously, was voidable by the heir only (g). However, should a lunatic or idiot have engrafted a declaration of trust upon any legal estate passed by him, a Court of equity would have had jurisdiction to set it aside (h); though generally it declined to interfere even in this case as against a purchaser for valuable consideration without notice of the lunacy or idiocy (i).

Bankruptcy.

12. If a man be declared a bankrupt, all the real and personal estate to which he is or may become entitled at the commencement of his bankrutcy, [or before his discharge,] vests in his trustee (a); but the surplus after payment of his debts still belongs to him (b), and of this interest he may create a trust.

Alien as to real estate.

13. An Alien might always have acquired real estate, whether freeholds or chattels real, by purchase, though he could not take it by operation of law, as by descent or jure mariti; and if he purchased it he might have held it until office found, but could not give an alienee a better title than he had himself (c). An alien, therefore, could only create a trust of real estate until the Crown stepped in.

As to personal estate.

As to personal estate an alien friend might, although an alien enemy could not, be the lawful owner of chattels personal, and might exercise the ordinary rights of proprietorship over them, and consequently might create a trust.

"Naturalization Act, 1870."

Now by the "Naturalization Act, 1870" (d), which came into operation on 12th May, 1870, real and personal property of every description may be taken, acquired, held, and disposed of by an alien in the same manner in all respects as by a natural born British subject (e), and a title to real and personal property of every description may be derived through, from, or in succession to an alien in the same manner in all respects as through, from, or in succession to a natural born subject, but this is not to "qualify an alien for any office or any municipal, parliamentary, or other franchise," and the enactment is not to affect any disposition or devolution before the date of the Act (f).

Traitors, felons and outlaws.

14. With regard to Traitors, Felons, and Outlaws, a distinction by the old law was taken between real and personal estate. In high treason, lands, whether held in fee simple, fee tail (g), or for life, were upon attainder forfeited absolutely to the Crown—and in all other felonies the profits of the land were upon attainder forfeited to the Crown during the life of the offender. Subject to these superior rights of the Crown by forfeiture, and to the year, day, and waste of the Crown (h), land, in cases of petit treason and murder, (and until the statute of 54 G. 3, c. 145, in all cases of felony), escheated upon the death of the offender, by reason of the corruption of blood caused by attainder, pro defectu tenentis, to the lord of the fee, if it was held in fee; but if he held in tail, the land upon the death of the offender devolved upon the issue in tail. Attainder related back to the time of the offence, and consequently from that time no valid trust could be created by the offender as against the Crown or the lord in cases of treason, petit treason, or murder, nor in cases of other felonies, except subject to the right of the Crown during the offender's life. As respects the large number of felonies in which no attainder took place, the offender, though convicted, might convey (a), and therefore might create a valid trust of his real estate. Outlawry upon felony was equivalent to attainder, and drew with it the same consequences (b).

As to the goods and chattels of traitors, felons, and outlaws, they were forfeited absolutely, but only from the time of conviction, or the declaration of outlawry, and therefore up to that period the traitor, felon, or outlaw, might vest his goods and chattels in a trustee upon trusts; but the law would not allow this power of disposition to be exercised collusively for the purpose of defeating the just rights of the Crown (c). The traitor, felon, or outlaw might sell the goods for valuable consideration (d); and so he might assign the property upon trust to secure the bonâ fide debt of a creditor (e); but the existence of the debt must have been actually proved, and the mere recital of it in the security was not sufficient (f). An assignment upon a meritorious consideration, as a bargain and sale to a trustee for the purpose of making provision for a son, would not support the deed (g). Outlawry in misdemeanours and civil actions (h) was a contempt of Court, and worked a forfeiture of the profits of the offender's lands for his life, and of his goods and chattels, absolutely. The person so outlawed, therefore, could not from that time affect the pernancy of the profits of his real estate, or make any settlement of his personal estate.

After defining by sect. 6, a "convict" to be "any person against whom, after the passing of the Act, judgment of death or of penal servitude shall have been pronounced upon a charge of treason or felony," the Act proceeds by sect. 8 to declare that a convict, while he is such, shall not bring any action or suit for recovery of any property, debt, or damage, and shall be incapable of alienation (a) and then sect. 9 empowers the Crown to appoint "an administrator" of the convict's property, in whom, upon appointment, all the real and personal estate of the convict is made by sect. 10 to vest, and such administrator is enabled by sect. 12 to let, mortgage, sell, convey, and transfer any part of the convict's property, and by subsequent sections to pay debts and liabilities, &c., and to make allowances for the support of any wife or child or reputed child, or other relative or reputed relative of such convict dependent upon him for support, or for the benefit of the convict himself while at large upon licence.

Subject as above, the property is, by sect. 18, to be held in trust for the convict, his heirs, or legal personal representatives, or other persons entitled; and on his ceasing to be subject to the operation of the Act (see sect. 7) is to revest in the convict or the persons claiming under him.

In the absence of an administrator appointed by the Crown, an "interim curator" may, by sect. 21, be appointed by Justices of the Peace in Petty Sessions, and by sect. 24 such curator is to sue or defend suits, sign discharges for income or debts, and generally manage the convict's property, make allowances for the maintenance of a wife or child, &c., and by sect. 25, may sell any personal property of the convict, but not without the sanction of a Justice or a Court of competent jurisdiction.

[(a) This however will not prevent the convict from paying his debts and applying his property for that purpose. The object of the section is to prevent the convict from improperly diverting his property either from his creditors or from his family. Ex parte Graves, 19 Ch. Div. 1. SECTION II.

WHO MAY BE A TRUSTEE.

Who may be a trustee.

The question who may be a trustee involves a variety of considerations. Thus, a person to be a trustee must be capable of taking and holding the property of which the trust is declared. Again, the trustee should be competent to deal with the estate as required by the trust or as directed by the beneficiaries, whereas certain classes are by nature or by the rules of law under disability. Again, the execution of the trust may call for the application of judgment and a knowledge of business. And again, the trustee ought to be amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court which administers trusts. In general terms, therefore, a trustee should be a person capable of taking and holding the legal estate, and possessed of natural capacity and legal ability to execute the trust, and domiciled within the jurisdiction of a Court of Equity. With this outline we proceed to consider certain exceptional cases where the fitness for the trusteeship may more or less be called into question.

The Crown.

1. The Sovereign may sustain the character of a trustee, so far as regards the capacity to take the estate, and to execute the trust; but great doubts have been entertained whether the subject can, by any legal process, enforce the performance of the trust. The right of the cestui que trust is sufficiently clear, but the defect lies in the remedy (a). A Court of Equity has no jurisdiction over the king's conscience, for that it is a power delegated by the king to the chancellor to exercise the king's equitable authority betwixt subject and subject (b). The old Court of Exchequer had, in its character of a court of revenue, an especial superintendence over the royal property; and it has been thought that through that channel a cestui que trust might indirectly obtain the relief to which, on the general principles of equity, he was confessedly entitled. No such jurisdiction, however, appears to have been known when Lord Hale was Chief Baron (c). Lord Hardwicke once observed in Chancery, "I will not decree a trust against the Crown in this Court, but it is a notion established in courts of revenue by modern decisions that the king may be a royal trustee" (a); but the doctrine was still unsettled in the time of Lord Northington (b); and in a more recent case (c), it was decided that though the Court of Exchequer could decree the possession of the property according to the equitable title, it had no jurisdiction to direct the Crown to convey the legal estate. The subject may undoubtedly appeal to the sovereign by presenting a petition of right (d), and it cannot be supposed that the fountain of justice would not do justice (e).

Corporations.

2. A corporation could not have been seised to a use, for, as was gravely observed, it had no soul, and how then could any confidence be reposed in it? But the technical rules upon which this doctrine proceeded, have long since ceased to operate in respect of trusts; and at the present day every body corporate, whether civil or ecclesiastical (f), is compellable in equity to carry the intention into execution (g). "A trust," said Lord Romilly, "may be of two characters, it may be of a general character or of a private and individual character. A person might leave a sum of money to a corporation in trust to support the children of A. B., and pay them the principal at 21. That would be a private and particular trust which the children could enforce against the corporation if the corporation applied the property to its own benefit. On the other hand, a person might leave money to a corporation in trust for the benefit of the inhabitants of a particular place, or for paving or lighting the town. That would be a public trust for the benefit of all the inhabitants, and the proper form of suit in the event of any breach of trust would be an information by the Attorney-General at the instance of all or some of the persons interested in the matter. If there was a particular trust in favour of particular persons and they were too numerous for all to be made parties, one or two might then sue, on behalf of themselves and the other cestuis que trust, for the performance of the trust (a)."

5 & 6 W. 4, c. 76.

Since the Municipal Corporations Act every municipal corporation named in the schedules to the Act (b), has become a trustee, and has now no longer the power to aliene and dispose of its property, except with the sanction of the lords of the Treasury, but is bound to apply it to certain public purposes pointed out by the Act; and if there be any misapplication, there lies a remedy in Equity by information (c).

Licence of the Crown.

Although the Court has ample jurisdiction to oblige a corporation to observe good faith, and the property already vested in a corporate body will be administered upon the trust attached to it, yet no real estate can be conveyed to a corporation upon any trust without the licence of the Crown.

But there is no objection to an assignment or bequest of pure personal estate to a corporation upon trust.

Bank of England.

3. The Bank of England cannot directly or indirectly be made a trustee of stock. The corporation manages the accounts of the public funds, and is charged with the care of paying the dividends, but refuses, and cannot be compelled by law, to notice any rights but those of the legal proprietors in whose name the stock is standing. [Nor can the Bank be required to recognize a tenancy in common of stock, and therefore as a corporation and individual can only hold stock as tenants in common, the Bank cannot be compelled to transfer consols into their names (d).]

[(d) Law Guarantee and Trust Society v. Governor and Company of Bank of England, 24 Q. B. D. 406, 411.]

Bank of England cannot be a trustee.

The Company will not enter notice of instruments inter vivos upon their books; and though they were formerly obliged by certain Acts of Parliament to enter the wills, or at least extracts from the wills, of deceased proprietors of stock, the object of the legislature, as the Court determined, was not to make the Company responsible for the due administration of the fund according to the equitable right, but to enable them to ascertain who under the will were the persons legally entitled (a). Had the construction been otherwise, the Bank of England would have been trustee for half the families in the kingdom. By 8 & 9 Vict. cap. 97 [repealed by 33 & 34 Vict. c. 69, but substantially re-enacted by the National Debt Act, 1870 (b)] executors and administrators of a deceased holder of stock are enabled to transfer on producing probate or letters of administration, and the Acts requiring an entry or registration by the Bank of any will or codicil are repealed (c).

[National Debt Commissioners and savings banks.]

[By the Government Annuities Act, 1882 (d), s. 8, the National Debt Commissioners or any savings bank are not to be affected by notice of any trust express implied, or constructive affecting any savings bank annuity or insurance (except such trusts as are from time to time recognized by law in relation to deposits in savings banks and except such trusts as are provided for by the Married Women's Property Acts.)]

Fence covert ought not to be appointed trustee. Has sufficient discretion.

4. A feme covert may be a trustee, but it would not be advisable to select a feme covert (e).

There is here no absolute want of discretion, for a woman has no less judgment after marriage than before (f); nay, as was quaintly added by Sir John Trevor, she rather improves it by her husband's teaching (g). The reasons upon which her disabilities are founded, are her own interest or her husband's, or both (h). Where these are not concerned, she possesses as much legal capacity, as if she were perfectly sui juris. Thus, she may execute powers simply collateral (i), and (somewhat contrary to principle) even powers appendant, or in gross (a). Now at law, the trustee is considered as the sole and absolute proprietor, and therefore he can have no power that does not flow from the legal ownership; but in equity, the absolute interest is vested in the cestui que trust, and, as the trustee is regarded in the light of a mere instrument, any authority communicated to a trustee must have the character of a power simply collateral (b). It follows that if a discretionary trust be committed to a feme covert, there is nothing to prevent her due administration of it, so far as relates to her legal judgment and capacity. At the same time a woman's will is not always her own, and if a trust were confided to a feme covert, the husband would, in fact, exercise no little influence; and, indeed, as [in cases not falling within the Married Women's Property Act, 1882], the husband is liable for her breaches of trust, [and as this liability is not confined to losses caused by her active misconduct, but extends to breaches of trust arising from negligence (c),] he must, for his own protection, look to the manner in which she discharges the office, and therefore she cannot be allowed to execute the trust without his concurrence (d). [This last remark, however, does not apply to the case of a married woman appointed a trustee, or to a feme sole trustee, marrying since the recent Act (e), in both of which cases the husband is exempted from all liability in respect of her breaches of trust committed during the coverture, unless he has acted or intermeddled in the trust; but the relief afforded to the husband by the Act has, by taking away from the cestuis que trust the security of the husband's liability, made the appointment of a married woman to be a trustee, at least as impolitic as it was before the Act.]

Her inability to pass the legal estate.

But further, the appointment of a feme covert [was, prior to the recent Act,] attended with inconvenience from her inability (except with the concurrence of her husband and through expensive forms) to join in the requisite assurances. At common law, if land be vested in a feme covert upon condition to enfeoff another, she may execute the feoffment by her own act, without the intervention of her husband (a); and hence it has been argued, that, in the case of a trust, she may, equally without her husband's concurrence, convey the estate to the parties equitably entitled (b). But between the two cases there is this clear and obvious distinction, that a condition is part and parcel of the common law, while a trust is only recognised in the forum of a court of equity; unless, therefore, the trust be so worded as to bear the construction of a legal condition, it seems impossible to contend that an instrument otherwise inoperative should, from the mere circumstance of the trust, which a court of law cannot notice, acquire a validity (c).

Feme covert a trustee for sale.

5. Should a feme covert, [married before the recent Act, be in respect of a trust created before the Act,] a trustee for sale, it would seem, if these views be correct, that she can exercise the discretion, and with the aid of the Fines and Recoveries Act, which requires the concurrence of the husband, can pass the estate. But there remains the consideration to whom the purchase-money is to be paid, and who is to sign the receipt. If it be paid to the husband it passes into the hands of a stranger, and if it be paid to the wife, the law immediately transfers it to the husband who is a stranger. If any receipt be taken it should be the joint receipt of the husband and wife (d). But the safest course would be to pay the money to the account of the wife at some responsible bank, payable upon the joint receipt of the husband and wife, and to remain there until required for the purposes of the trust, and if the husband and wife took it out of the bank for any other purpose he would be liable as for a breach of trust.

When the husband is a lunatic or idiot, or living apart from the wife, or otherwise incapable (as from infancy (e), or from being abroad and not heard of for years (f)), of joining in the execution of a deed, the [High Court of Justice (g)] has power to dispense with the husband's concurrence, [in which case the deed need not be acknowledged by the feme covert (h)]. has frequently exercised this jurisdiction by enabling a feme covert entitled to freeholds or copyholds (a), in fee simple (b), in fee tail (c), or for life, either in possession or reversion (d), or to dower (e), or to leaseholds (f), [or to personal estate falling under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 57] (g), "by deed or surrender, to dispose of, release, or surrender all her estate and interest" (the words of the order on one occasion) (h), in the premises. The order therefore will not affect the husband's curtesy, if any (i). The Court will not direct the form of conveyance (j), but it looks to the propriety of the order with reference to each particular estate, and it will not give the feme covert a roving power of disposition over any property which she may happen to have (k). In most cases the Court has made the order to enable the wife to deal with her own property for her maintenance, but in other cases the court has enabled the feme covert to execute a trust (l): and it would seem therefore that where there is an incapacity of the husband to join in a deed, the feme covert (who has no want of discretion) can execute the trust by the aid of the Court.

8. Where the feme has been married or the trust has been undertaken by her since the commencement of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (1 January, 1883), she can execute the trust without the concurrence of her husband, and as if she were a feme sole (a). Where therefore she is a trustee for sale she can exercise the discretion, pass the estate, and sign a good receipt for the purchase-money.] Feme sole.

9. It is almost equally undesirable to appoint a feme who is single a trustee, for should she marry [she would be liable to be influenced by her husband who, so long as he abstained from active interference, would be under no liability to make good any breaches of trust committed by her during the coverture.] The Court at one time refused to appoint a feme sole a trustee, as, in the event of her marriage [it might lead to inconvenience as the husband would have the power of interfering] (b). But in a more recent case the M. R., after consulting with the other judges, appointed a feme sole a trustee (c), and the Lords Justices have since made a similar order (d).

[(a) 45 & 46 Vict. c. 75, ss. 1. 2, 5, 24. See Kingsman v. Kingsman, 6 Q. B. Div. 122, 128. It is open to argument whether the 2nd and 5th sections of the Act apply to trust property, more particularly as the 18th section enables a married woman who is an executrix, administratrix, or trustee, to sue and be sued, and to transfer the trust property in certain special cases without her husband, as if she were a feme sole, and this section is to some extent redundant if the 2nd and 5th sections apply to trust property. It is, however, clear from the 1st and 24th sections that a married woman may accept a trust, or the office of executrix or administratrix, as if she were a feme sole; and that her husband is exempted from all liabilities in respect of her breaches of trust, so long as he does not act or intermeddle in the trust; and it would be a highly inconvenient construction of the Act to hold that a married woman is not empowered to acquire, hold, and dispose of the trust property generally without the concurrence of her husband. And inasmuch as the language of sections 2 and 5 is wide enough to include trust property, it is conceived that any inference to be drawn from section 18 is not sufficient to restrict the operation of sections 2 and 5 to property belonging to married women beneficially.]

Infant ought not to be appointed Trustee.

Has no legal discretion.

10. An infant labours under still greater disability than a feme covert; for, first, as regards judyment and discretion, a feme is admitted to have capacity, though she cannot in all cases freely exercise it; but an infant is said altogether to want capacity (a). An infant cannot be steward of the court of a manor (b), or attorney for a person in a suit (c), or guardian to a minor (d), or be a bailiff or receiver (e); but can only discharge such acts as are merely ministerial, as to be an attorney to deliver seisin (f), or as a lord of a manor to give effect to a custom (g), or to appoint a seneschal (h). So he might, until an Act to the contrary (i), have been, as executor, the channel or conduit pipe through which the assets found their way to the hands of creditors in a due course of administration (j); but had he acted otherwise than ministerially, as by signing an acquittance without receipt of the money, such an exercise of discretion had been actually void (k). [However an infant may by instrument inter vivos (l) exercise a power simply collateral over both real and personal estate (m), and as to personal estate he may exercise a power in gross notwithstanding that it may involve the application of discretion (n), but as to real estate it would seem that such a power could not be exercised unless expressly authorized by the instrument creating the power (o). And where an intention appears that the power is to be exercisable notwithstanding infancy, an infant may appoint even although his interest may be affected by the appointment (p). A trust which requires the exercise of discretion cannot be executed by an infant (q)].

Power of passing the estate.

11. With respect to an infant's ability to pass the estate, it seems to be generally agreed that, at common law, a feoffment of land (a) or an actual delivery of goods and chattels (b), is an act of so great solemnity, that it serves to carry the present possession, and is voidable only, and not void. Where the property is of an incorporeal nature, as the delivery of the thing itself is impossible, the common law has substituted the kindred precaution of delivery of the deed. The effect of a deed delivered by an infant has been much disputed; by some it has been held to be absolutely null and void (c), by others to be voidable only (d), and by others again to be void or voidable, as the validity of the execution is taken to be for the infant's benefit or not (e). Another opinion still (which is that of Perkins (f), and was adopted in the case of Zouch v. Parsons (g), and may be regarded as the doctrine of the present day) is, that an infant's deed, where the delivery of it answers to livery of seisin, and operates as the conveyance of an interest, is merely voidable; but where it does not take effect as an assurance by delivery of the deed, as in a power of attorney (h), then it is actually void. Lord Mansfield, however, subjoined the qualification, that if a case should arise where it would be more beneficial to the infant that the deed should be considered as void, as if he might incur a forfeiture, or be subject to damage, or a breach of trust in respect of a third person (i), unless it was deemed void, the reason of an infant's privileges would in such case warrant an exception from the rule (j). Where the instrument carries no solemnity with it, equivalent to feoffment or delivery, the validity of the act must then depend on the question how far the assurance promotes the interest of the infant (k).

[Severance of joint tenancy.]

[A joint tenancy may be severed by an infant by an instrument taking effect by delivery of his hand, but as such instrument is voidable by the infant on attaining full age, there may arise this disadvantage to the other joint tenants, that during a certain period they might hold and consider that the infant had severed the joint tenancy, and then find at a later period that he had a right to undo that which he seemed to have done (a).

[Covenant by an infant.]

12. A covenant by an infant, if for his benefit, is not void but only voidable; and a covenant by an infant feme, in contemplation of her marriage, to settle her property to be acquired during the coverture, is binding until it is avoided; and the feme may, after attaining twenty-one, and during her coverture, either avoid the covenant or ratify it as to any property for the time being belonging to her for her separate use, but prior to the recent Act her ratification would not bind property acquired by her after the time of such ratification (b). Since the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c), it is conceived that the ratification by the feme covert of the covenant would bind not only the separate property she had then acquired, but any separate property she might thereafter acquire during the coverture.

[Appointing an attorney.]

13. By a recent Act, a married woman, whether an infant or not, has power, as if she were unmarried and of full age, by deed to appoint an attorney on her behalf for the purpose of executing any deed or doing any other act which she might herself execute or do (d)].

Infant cannot be guilty of a breach of trust.

14. Another objection to an infant trustee is, that he cannot be decreed to make satisfaction on the ground of a breach of trust (e). However, an infant has no privilege to cheat men (f), and therefore he will not be protected, if he be old and cunning enough to contrive a fraud (g).

From the great inconveniences attending the appointment of an infant as trustee, there arises a strong presumption wherever property is given to an infant, that he is intended to take it not as trustee, but beneficially (a). Consequent presumption that he takes not as trustee, but beneficially.

15. An alien until a recent Act (b) could not effectually be a trustee in respect of freeholds or chattels real, for the policy of the law would not allow an alien to sue or be sued to the prejudice of the Crown touching lands in any court of law or equity (c); and on inquisition found, the legal estate of the property vested by forfeiture in the Crown. Alien formerly could not be trustee of freeholds or chattels real.

In a case where a testator devised real estate to his wife and an alien upon trust to sell, and they sold accordingly, and executed a conveyance, a question afterwards arose whether the purchaser had a good title, and with the view of curing the defect an Act of Naturalisation was obtained; but it was held, that the common form of the Act of Naturalisation did not confirm the purchaser's title retrospectively, but that the objection remained. The parties had endeavoured to introduce into the bill special words to meet the case, but the departure from the usual course was found impracticable (d). Real estate devised to British subject and alien upon trust.

In respect of chattels personal there was never any objection to an alien friend as trustee as regards his ability either to take or to hold the estate. Chattels personal.

Now by 33 Vict. c. 14, sect. 1, an alien may take, acquire, hold, and dispose of real and personal property of every description, in the same manner as if he were a natural born subject. The objection, therefore, to an alien being a trustee of freeholds or chattels real has been removed. 33 Vict. c. 14.

If, however, the alien be domiciled abroad, it is an objection to his fitness for the office of trustee, as he is not amenable to the jurisdiction of the Court (e). Alien domiciled abroad not a fit trustee.

who have not been sufficiently careful in the management of their own. The past or any subsequent act of bankruptcy will have no operation upon the trust estate.

Cestuis que trust should not, as a general rule, be appointed trustees.

17. Cestuis que trust are not, as such, incapacitated from being trustees for themselves and others; but, as a general rule, they are not altogether fit persons for the office, in consequence of the probability of a conflict between their interest and their duty (a).

Relatives.

18. Sir John Romilly, M.R., considered it also objectionable to appoint any relative a trustee, from the frequency of breaches of trust committed by trustees at the instance of cestuis que trust nearly connected with them (b).

However, there is no positive legal objection to appointing either a cestui que trust or a relative, and indeed it is not always easy to find a trustee who is neither a cestui que trust nor a relative, and this the Court itself has experienced; for, notwithstanding its repugnance to such a course, it has been obliged occasionally to appoint a relative, who is also a cestui que trust, to be a trustee (c). In one case the Court, in appointing two new trustees, allowed the husband of a cestui que trust to be one of them upon his undertaking, that, if he became sole trustee, he would immediately take steps for the appointment of a co-trustee (d), [and in another case the appointment was made with a direction, that in case the husband should become sole trustee, a new trustee should forthwith be appointed (e). But in a recent case in Lunacy, where three new trustees were appointed, the Court allowed the husband of the tenant for life to be one of them, without requiring any such undertaking (f);] and in other cases the husbands of cestuis que trust in remainder have been appointed trustees (g); [but the late Master of the Rolls refused, in a recent case, to appoint a man a trustee of his own marriage settlement, though all the persons interested assented to the application, and no other person could be found to accept the office, on the ground that the wife, who had a life interest to her separate use without power of anticipation, would not be properly protected (a).

[Settled Land Act.]

Neither the tenant for life of settled land (b) nor his solicitor (c) will be appointed by the Court a trustee of the settlement under the Settled Land Act, 1882. And in one case the Court refused to appoint two brothers trustees, and said there must be two independent trustees (d). In a recent case the Court refused to sanction the appointment by a continuing trustee, who was a solicitor and acted as such for the trust and for some of the beneficiaries, of his son and partner, who was also a solicitor, as a co-trustee in the place of the retiring trustee, but intimated that such an appointment made bonâ fide out of Court would be valid (e), and the Court has refused to appoint a person interested in remainder after the estate of an infant tenant in tail (f).

[Charity.]

19. Where a charity has been founded for the purpose of teaching or expounding certain religious doctrines, or for the exclusive benefit of persons holding certain religious views, the trusteeship of the charity should be confined to persons holding those doctrines or views (g), and the same rule would seem to apply where the religious object of the charity is the primary object, though there may be a secondary object, as for instance the repairing of roads, which can be administered as well by persons of one sect or religious belief as of another. But where the object of the charity is eleemosynary, and it is not restricted to persons of any particular religious denomination, the trusteeship need not be confined to persons holding the doctrines of the church or sect to which the founder belonged, but the most eligible person for the office may be selected without regard to his religious views (h).]

Proper number of trustees.

20. We may here remark, that care should be taken not only to provide for the fitness of the trustee, but also to secure an adequate number of trustees. A single trustee, whether originally appointed such or become so by survivorship, has the absolute and unlimited control at law over the property; and should he become involved in difficulties, he is under a temptation which, notwithstanding recent penal enactments, must still be regarded as strong, to sustain his credit by resorting to a fund of which he can with certainty possess himself, and without the fear of immediate detection. The fallacious hope of replacing the money before the day of payment arrives, has lulled the conscience of many, not the worst of mankind, when suffering under the pressure of poverty. There can be no objection to the appointment of a single trustee, where the trust reposed in him is merely a nominal confidence; but where the administration of the trust involves the receipt and custody of money, the safeguard of at least two trustees ought never to be dispensed with (a).

Appointment of new trustees.

And on the death of one of the original trustees, no time should be lost in restoring the fund to its proper security by the substitution of a new trustee, a precaution, it is feared, but too frequently neglected, from motives of delicacy,—the surviving trustee being sensitive, and conceiving his honesty to be called into question, and the cestuis que trust (often too ignorant of the world to see the necessity of taking precautions against fraud), being apt to suspect their legal adviser of a wish to create business at the expense of the estate.

To guard against the constant recurrence of appointments of new trustees, it is common, at least where the property is considerable, to appoint four trustees originally, for then, on the decease of the first or even a second trustee, an immediate substitution is not very material, but the safe rule is, where money is concerned, always to appoint at least three trustees, and to keep the number full. As regards stock, more than four trustees are scarcely ever appointed, and it is a general rule of the Bank not to allow stock to be transferred into the names of more than four joint proprietors. But in special cases so many as five or six have been admitted. (b)

B. D. 406.]

SECTION III.

WHO MAY BE CESTUI QUE TRUST.

1. It may be laid down as a general rule that as æquitas sequitur legem, those who are capable of taking the legal estate, may, through the channel of the trust, be made recipients of the equitable.

The Crown may be cestui que trust.

2. A trust may be declared in favour of the Sovereign. While uses were in their fiduciary state, it was held that in order effectually to limit a use to the Crown, the title must have been matter of record. "It behoveth," says Lord Bacon, "that both the declaration of the use and the conveyance itself be matter of record, because the king's title is compounded of both; I say not appearing of record, but by conveyance of record. And, therefore, if I covenant with J. S. to levy a fine to him to the king's use, which I do accordingly, and the deed of covenant be not enrolled, and the deed be found by office, the use vesteth not. E converso, if enrolled. If I covenant with J. S. to enfeoff him to the king's use, and the deed be enrolled and the feoffment also be found by office, the use vesteth. But if I levy a fine, or suffer a recovery to the king's use, and declare the use by deed of covenant enrolled, though the king be not a party, yet it is good enough" (a). These observations apply only to original gifts of land from a subject to the Crown, and, when the limits of the prerogative were much less accurately defined than they now are, the interposition of such a barrier between the subject and the Crown may have been necessary. Where an equitable interest in real or personal estate (b) accrued to the Crown by course of law, as by the treason of the subject, or by forfeiture, or on the doctrine of bona vacantia, it was not doubted that the Crown could sue without even a previous inquisition. According to Sir T. Clarke, an inquisition was necessary only where the Crown asserting its prerogative chose to make a seizure without interpleading with the subject in Court to establish its title, but where the Crown waiving its prerogative interpleaded with the subject, as by filing a bill, there an inquisition was unnecessary and superfluous (c).

(c) Burgess v. Wheate, 1 Eden, 188. See now 33 & 34 Vict. c. 23.

[By the Intestates Estates Act, 1884 (a), the Court is empowered, on the application or with the consent of the Attorney-General, notwithstanding that no office has been found, and no commission issued or executed, to order a sale of any hereditament or any estate or interest therein to which the Crown is entitled, and to dispose of the proceeds of such sale (b).]

A corporation.

3. A trust of lands cannot be limited to a corporation without a license from the Crown, both on general principle, and also by analogy to the statutory enactment as to uses (c). If corporations could take in the names of trustees without a license, the rule requiring a license would become a dead letter and the rights of the Crown effectually evaded, for it makes no material difference whether the legal estate be limited to the corporation directly or to a trustee for the corporation.

Alien.

4. As regards an alien, a trust of lands might always have been declared in his favour (d), and might as against all but the Crown have been enforced by him for his own benefit (e); but as the same mischiefs would follow from an alien's enjoyment of the equitable, as of the legal interest in lands (f), the equitable interest might at any time have been claimed by the Crown. The legal estate was not affected (g), but the Crown had the right of suing a subpœna against the trustee in equity (h). An alien could not, however, take an equitable interest by act of law as by descent or curtesy (i).

Executory trust for alien.

A distinction was taken, that although where a trust was perfected in favour of an alien the Crown might be entitled, yet where a trust in favour of an alien was not in esse, but only in fieri and executory, the Court would do no act to give it to the Crown in right of the alien (j).

Where a testator directed an estate to be sold, and the proceeds divided amongst certain persons, some of whom were aliens; there, as according to the intention, which was supposed to be executed at the time of death, the interest devised was money, the Crown was not entitled, for the mere purpose of working a forfeiture, to exercise an election by retaining the property as land; and therefore, aliens were not debarred from enjoying their legacies in the pecuniary character which the testator had stamped upon them (a).

Alien might be cestui que trust of proceeds of sale of land.

Now by 33 Vict. c. 14, an alien may take, acquire, hold and dispose of real and personal property of every description in the same manner as if he were a natural born subject. But the Act is not retrospective (b).

33 Vict. c. 14.

5. It may be remarked, that in certain cases persons are capable of taking an equitable interest, to whom the legal estate could not have been similarly limited. Thus, at common law [until the recent Married Women's Property Acts] no property, real or personal, could be so limited to a married woman, as to exclude the legal rights of the husband during coverture: but, by way of trust, the beneficial interest could be placed entirely at the disposal of a married woman, so that she should be regarded as a feme sole, and the husband should not participate in the enjoyment.

Distinctions in reference to equitable and legal interests.

6. So the legal estate cannot be limited to the objects of a charity, as to the poor of a parish, in perpetual succession; but in a court of equity, where the feudal rules do not apply, the intention of the donor will be carried into effect (c), provided the requisitions of 51 & 52 Vict. c. 42 be complied with. The Act last referred to does not produce any incapacity in the cestuis que trust to take, but only prohibits the alienation of land, or property savouring of land, in any other mode than that prescribed by the Act, for objects falling within the legal definition of charitable purposes.

CHAPTER IV.

WHAT PROPERTY MAY BE MADE THE SUBJECT OF A TRUST.

As a general rule, all property, whether real or personal, and whether legal or equitable (a), may be made the subject of a trust, provided the policy of the law, or any statutory enactment, does not prevent the settlor from parting with the beneficial interest in favour of the intended cestui que trust.

Copyholds may be subject of trust, and equitable interest descends as legal.

1. A trust may be created of lands regulated by local custom, as copyholds. Thus, A., tenant of a manor, may surrender to the use of B. and his heirs, upon trust for C. and his heirs. And as equity follows the law, the trust in C will devolve in the same manner as the legal estate.

Power to entail equitable interest depends on custom to entail legal estate.

2. If the custom of the manor permit an entail of the legal estate, an entail may in like manner be created of the equitable (b); but if there be no such custom as to the legal estate, there can be no entail of the equitable (c). Where, therefore, the equitable interest in lands held of a manor not permitting an entail is limited to A., and the heirs of his body, the estate is not construed as an entail but as a fee conditional;—that is, on issue born the condition is fulfilled, and A. may alienate in fee. But until alienation, the equitable interest descends in the line of the issue like an entail; and if A. die without issue, an equitable right of entry reverts to the settlor or his heir. This doctrine is attended with important consequences, which are often overlooked. Thus copyholds are devised to trustees upon trusts corresponding with the limitations of freeholds in strict settlement, and A., the first tenant for life, has a son born, but who lives only a few weeks. If the manor do not permit an entail, the son takes a fee simple conditional, and all the subsequent limitations are void. In such a case, the copyholds should be settled like leaseholds, so as not to vest absolutely unless a child attain twenty-one, and on his death under that age to devolve on the next taker under the entail of the freeholds.

Equitable interests in foreign personal property.

3. How far equitable interests may be engrafted on foreign property requires consideration. As regards movable estate there is no difficulty, for it follows the person, and if the settlor himself be domiciled within the jurisdiction of the Court, all his movable estate, whether in the East or West Indies, or elsewhere, is deemed to be at home, and governed by the laws of this country. A trust, therefore, may freely be created of such interests, and would be enforced in equity. In certain cases, however, there might be practical obstructions in the way of executing the trust, from the circumstance of the property lying in fact beyond the reach of the Court.

Equitable interests in foreign real property.

4. As to lands lying in a foreign country, the Court will enforce natural equities, and compel the specific performance of contracts, provided the parties be within the jurisdiction, and there be no insuperable obstacle to the execution of the decree. Thus Lord Eldon allowed a consignee to have a lien, upon the application of general principles, for proper advances upon estates in the West Indies (a). So the Court has enforced specific performance of articles between parties for ascertaining the boundaries of their estates abroad (b), has compelled a person entitled to an estate in Scotland to give effect to an equitable mortgage by deposit of deeds of the Scotch estate, though by the law of Scotland a deposit of deeds created no lien (c), has directed an account of the rents

(c) Ex parte Pollard, 3 Mont. & Ayr. 340; reversed Mont. & Chit. 239. But see Norris v. Chambres, 29 Beav. 246. Martin v. Martin, 2 R. & M. 507, may be supported on the ground that the mortgagee had a lien for advances and supplies. Had the lien not existed, Sir J. Leach thought the plaintiff might have compelled a sale as against the husband, but that such equity attached not to the estate, but to the person only: that after the institution of a suit, the equity would have bound the estate, but until bill filed the husband could make a good title even to a purchaser with notice; and the Court instanced the case of a husband, the apparent owner of two estates of equal value, and that he made a settlement of estate A. under the direction of the Court, and that the trustees were afterwards evicted by defect of the husband's title: in that case the Court would oblige the husband to make a settlement of estate B., but that until the bill was on the file the husband remained the owner of the estate B., and could and profits of lands abroad (a), has ordered an absolute sale (b), and foreclosure of a mortgage (c), and has relieved against a fraudulent conveyance of an estate abroad (d), and prevented a defendant by injunction from taking possession (e). In such cases, however, the Court, according to the modern doctrine, requires as a substratum for its jurisdiction that there should exist a personal privity between the plaintiff and defendant, and in the absence of such privity, no remedy lies by way of lien against the land itself (f). Parties out of the jurisdiction may now be served abroad, but this does not extend the jurisdiction of the Court in respect of relief (g).

5. While the Court will, to this extent, administer equities, and enforce contracts as to lands abroad, so far as the Court, by acting upon the parties, can give effect to the decree (h) there are cases where the foreign law presents an insuperable obstacle to the execution of the decree, and then the Court will not make a decree which would be nugatory (i).

Trusts of lands abroad.

6. The better opinion is that trusts, not constructively such, like natural equities or equities arising from contract, but properly such, and formerly known as uses, cannot be engrafted upon foreign real estate. The law regulating lands in England has a local character. How then can a system adapted exclusively to lands in England be transplanted and attached to lands abroad? Could entails, for instance, be created when none are allowed, effectually sell or charge it. As to personal equities, see further, Morse v. Faulkner, 1 Anst. 11, 3 Sw. 429, note (a); Averall v. Wade, Ll. & Go. temp. Sugden, 261; Johnson v. Holdsworth, 1 Sim. N. S. 108; Hastie v. Hastie, 2 Ch. Div. 304.

and if created, by what machinery could they be barred? It has been seen that in the case of copyholds, when the custom of the manor does not allow entails of the legal estate, none can be created of the equitable, and the same principle will apply to trusts of foreign lands. The few authorities upon the subject tend to confirm this view, but there is little light to be obtained from them, and the law must be regarded as still somewhat unsettled (a).

CHAPTER V.

OF THE FORMALITIES REQUIRED FOR THE CREATION OF TRUSTS.

UPON this subject we propose to treat—First, Of Declarations of Trusts at common law. Secondly, Of the Statute of Frauds. Thirdly, Of the Statutes of Wills.

SECTION I.

OF TRUSTS AT COMMON LAW.

Trusts averrable.

1. TRUSTS, like uses, are of their own nature averrable, i.e., may be declared by word of mouth without writing (a); as, if before the Statute of Frauds an estate had been conveyed unto and to the use of A. and his heirs, a trust might have been raised by parol in favour of B. (b), and since the statute, though a trust of lands cannot be declared by parol without proof of it in writing, no other proof is requisite than a simple note in writing duly signed, but not under seal (c).

Averment must not contradict the instrument.

2. But the Court, following the analogy of uses, never permitted the averment of a trust in contradiction to any expression of intention on the face of the instrument itself (d).

Nor be repugnant to the scope of the instrument.

3. And averment is excluded, if from the nature of the instrument or any circumstance of evidence appearing on the face of it, an intention of making the legal holder the beneficiary also, can be clearly implied. Thus a trust cannot be averred, where a valuable consideration is paid (a); and if a pension from the Crown be granted to A., a trust cannot be raised by parol in favour of B.; for a pension is conferred upon motives of honour, and the inducements to the bounty are the personal merits of the annuitant (b).

Trusts not averrable where deed required to pass the legal estate.

4. It was a principle of uses that, on a feoffment, which could be made by parol, a use might be declared by parol, but where a deed was necessary for passing the legal estate, there the use which was engrafted could not be raised by averment (c). As trusts have been modelled after the likeness of the use (d), the distinction at the present day may deserve attention. It is laid down by Duke expressly, that, where the things given may pass without deed there a charitable use may be averred by witnesses; but, where the things cannot pass without deed, there charitable uses cannot be averred without a deed proving the use (e). And Lord Thurlow, it is probable, alluded to the same distinction when he observed, "I have been accustomed to consider uses as averrable, but perhaps, when looked into, the cases may relate to feoffment, not to conveyances by bargain and sale, or lease and release" (f). And in Adlington v. Cann (g), where a testator devised the legal estate in lands to A. and B. and their heirs by a will duly executed, and left an unattested paper referring to trusts for a charity, Mr. Wilbraham in the argument observed, "If this were a voluntary deed, would a paper, even declaring a trust, be sufficient to take it from the grantee? no, certainly" (h); and it is very observable that Lord Hardwicke, in referring to this observation, excludes the case of a deed, and lays it down that "if the testator had made a feoffment to himself and his heirs, and left such a paper, this would have been a good declaration of trust" (i).

Declaration of trust by the king.

5. The declaration of a use by the king must have been by letters patent (j); and it seems that the same doctrine is now applicable to trusts (k).

SECTION II.

OF THE STATUTE OF FRAUDS.

By the seventh section of the Statute of Frauds (a) it is enacted, that "all declarations or creations of trusts or confidences of any lands, tenements, or hereditaments, shall be manifested and proved by some writing, signed by the party who is by law enabled to declare such trust, or by his last will in writing, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect."

Upon the subject of this enactment we shall first briefly point out what interests are within the Act; and, secondly, what formalities are required by it.

I. Of the interests within the Act.

Copyholds.

1. Copyholds are to be deemed within the operation of the clause, for as a trust is engrafted on the estate of the copyhold tenant, the rights of the lord, who claims by title paramount, cannot in any way be injuriously affected, and therefore the ordinary ground for exempting copyholds from statutory enactments does not exist (b). A trust, therefore, of a copyhold cannot be declared by parol so as to make the copyholder a trustee for another (c).

Chattels real within the Act.

2. Chattels real are within the purview of the Act, and a trust of them must therefore be evidenced by writing, as in the case of freeholds (d).

Chattels personal not within the Act.

3. But chattels personal are not within the Act, and a trust by averment will be supported (e). It has even been held that a sum of money secured upon a mortgage of real estate, is not an interest within the Act, and that a parol declaration is good (a). And if a trust be once created by parol declaration, it cannot be affected by any subsequent parol declaration of the settlor to the contrary (b). But the approval of a draft declaration of trust, subject to further consideration as to one of the provisions of it, will not amount to a parol declaration (c). If a settlor direct a sum to be invested in the names of the trustees of her marriage settlement, the Court considers this as tantamount to a parol declaration, or rather the presumption is, that the sum so invested should be held upon the same trusts as the settled funds (d).

(c) Mr. Hargrave seems to have thought, that even the uses of a surrender were trusts within the intention of the Act; for, in a note to Coke on Littleton, he observes, "A nuncupative will of copyholds was a valid declaration of the uses, where the surrender was silent as to the form, till the 29 Car. 2 required all delarations of trust to be in writing." But the surrender of a copyhold to uses is merely a direction to the lord in what manner to regrant the estate, and the surrenderee is a cestui que use by misnomer only, and not in fact; and indeed the Court of Queen's Bench has expressly decided that uses of copyholds are not within the Statute of Frauds, on the ground that a surrender to uses is not the creation of a trust or confidence apart from the legal estate, but a mode established by custom of transferring the legal estate itself; Doe v. Danvers, 7 East, 299.

Case of fraud.

4. The Statute of Frauds cannot be pleaded by a defendant to whom the estate has been conveyed without consideration and who claims to retain it under circumstances which the Court deems fraudulent (e).

Charitable uses within the Act.

5. An attempt was formerly made to have a charitable use excepted from the statute, but Lord Talbot decreed (f), and Lord Hardwicke affirmed the decision (g), and Lord Northington said every man of sense must subscribe to it (h), that a gift to a charity must be treated on the same footing with any other disposition.

Whether the Crown is bound by the statute.

6. It was held by the Court of Queen's Bench (i), that the Crown was bound by the Statute of Frauds, and therefore was not at liberty to prove a superstitious use by parol; but in the Court of Exchequer it was ruled, on the contrary, that the Statute of Frauds did not bind the Crown, but took place only between subject and subject. Lord Hardwicke expressed his doubts upon the latter doctrine, that the Crown was not bound by a statute unless specially named; but at the same time mentioned a case in which that doctrine had been followed (a).

Colonial lands.

7. It seems the statute will not apply to lands situate in a colony planted before the Statute of Frauds was passed (b). Planters carry out with them their country's laws as they subsist at the time; but subsequent enactments at home do not follow them across the sea, unless it be so specially provided.

The statute to be a bar must be pleaded.

[8. If an action be brought to have the benefit of a parol trust of lands, a defendant, who would rely on the Statute of Frauds as a bar, must under the present practice insist upon it by his pleading (c).]

II. What formalities are required by the statute.

Trusts to be proved by, not declared in writing.

1. The principle point to be noticed is, that trusts, as already observed, are not necessarily to be declared in writing, but only to be manifested and proved by writing; for if there be written evidence of the existence of such a trust, the danger of parol declarations, against which the statute was directed, is effectually removed (d). It may be questioned whether the Act did not intend that the declaration itself should be in writing; for the ninth section enacts, that "all grants and assignments of any trust or confidence shall likewise be in writing, signed by the party granting or assigning the same, or by such last will or devise (e);" but whatever may have been the actual intention of the legislature, the construction put upon the clause in practice is now firmly established.

As by a letter, recital, &c.

2. The statute will be satisfied, if the trust can be manifested and proved by any subsequent acknowledgment by the trustee (f), as by an express declaration by him (g), or any memorandum to that effect (h), or by a letter under his hand (i), by his answer in Chancery (a), or by an affidavit (b), or by a recital in a bond (c), or deed (d), &c.; and the trust, however late the proof, operates retrospectively from the time of its creation. Even where a lease was granted to A., who afterwards became bankrupt, and then executed a declaration of trust in favour of B., a jury having found upon an issue directed from Chancery that A.'s name was bonâ fide used in the lease in trust for B., it was held that the assignees of A. had no title to the property (e).

Relation to subject-matter, and nature of trust must be clear.

3. But with regard to letters and loose acknowledgments of that kind, the Court expects demonstration that they relate to the subject matter (f); nor will the trust be executed if the precise nature of the trust cannot be ascertained (g); and if the trust be established on the answer of the trustee, the terms of it must be regulated by the whole answer as it stands, and not be taken from one part of the answer to the rejection of another (h); and the plaintiff, if he read the answer in proof of the trust, must at the same time read from it the particular terms of the trust (i). When the trust is manifested and proved by letters, parol evidence may be admitted to show the position in which the writer then stood, the circumstances by which he was surrounded, and the degree of weight and credit to be attached to the letters, independently of any question of construction (j).

The writing must be signed.

4. It will be observed, that the words of the statute require the writing to be signed (k); and not only the fact of the trust, but also the terms of it, must be supported by evidence under signature (l); but, as in the analogous case of agreements under the fourth section of the Act (m), the terms of the trust may be collected from a paper not signed, provided such paper can be clearly connected with, and is referred to by, the writing that is signed (a).

Who is the party "enabled to declare the trust."

5. The signature must be by the party "who is by law enabled to declare such trust." It has been occasionally contended, that by this description was meant the person seised or possessed of the legal estate; but it has been decided that whether the property be real (b), or personal (c), the party enabled to declare the trust is the owner of the beneficial interest, and who has therefore the absolute control over the property, the holder of the legal estate being a mere instrument or conduit pipe. [Where, therefore, an antenuptial agreement that the intended wife's realty should belong to her for her separate use was signed only by the husband, the fee was not affected by the agreement so as to enable the wife to devise it as separate property (d).]

SECTION III.

OF THE STATUTES OF WILLS.

Statute of Frauds.

1. By the fifth section of the Statute of Frauds (e), all devises of lands are required to be in writing and signed by the testator, or by some person in his presence and by his direction, and to be attested or subscribed in his presence by three witnesses; and by the nineteenth section, all bequests of personal estate are required to be in writing, with the exception of certain specified cases in which nuncupative wills were allowed (f). And by the 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 9, wills made on or after January 1, 1838, whether of real or personal estate, must be executed and attested with the special solemnities there mentioned.

Principle of rejecting declarations not testamentary in respect of wills.

2. To trace the operations of these enactments we must bear in mind that the absolute owner of property combines in himself both the legal and equitable interest, and when the legislature enacts that no devise or bequest of property shall be valid without certain ceremonies, a testator cannot by an informal instrument affect the equitable, any more than the legal, estate, for the one is a constituent part of the ownership as much as the other. Thus, if a testator by will duly signed and attested give lands to A. and his heirs "upon trust," but without specifying the particular trust intended, and then by a paper, not duly signed and attested as a will or codicil, declare a trust in favour of B., the beneficial interest under the will is a part of the original ownership and cannot be passed by the informal paper, but will descend to the heir-at-law, or if the will be made since 1837, and contain a residuary devise, will pass to the residuary devisee. So if a legacy be bequeathed by a will, duly executed, to A. "upon trust," and the testator, by parol, express an intention that it shall be held by A. upon trust for B., such a direction is in fact a testamentary disposition of the equitable interest in the chattel, and therefore void by the statute, which requires a will duly executed. If it be said that such expression of intention, though void as a devise or bequest, may yet be good as a declaration of trust, and therefore that where the legal estate of a freehold is well devised, a trust may be engrafted upon it by a simple note in writing; and where a chattel personal is well bequeathed, a trust of it, as excepted from the seventh section of the Statute of Frauds, may be raised by a mere parol declaration; the answer is, that a wide distinction exists between testamentary dispositions and declarations of trust. The former are ambulatory until the death of the testator, but the latter take effect, if at all, at the time of the execution. "A deed," observed Mr. Justice Buller, in a similar case, "must take place upon its execution, or not at all; it is not necessary for a deed to convey an immediate interest in possession, but it must take place as passing the interest to be conveyed at the execution; but a will is quite the reverse, and can only operate after death" (a). [It seems therefore on principle], that if the intended disposition be of a testamentary character, and not to take effect in the testator's lifetime, but to be ambulatory until his death, such disposition is inoperative unless it be declared in writing in conformity with the statutory enactments regulating devises and bequests (b).

(a) Habergham v. Vincent, 2 Ves. jun. 230.

(b) [See however Re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. D. 594; Re Boyes, 26 Ch. D. 531.] The law laid down by Jenkins, 3 Cent. Cas. 26, is founded on mistake, as from the report of the case in Fitzherb. Ab. Devise, 22, it appears that the beneficial interest was decreed to the heir, not, as Jenkins supposed, of the devisee, but of the testator.

In Metham v. Devon, 1 P. W. 529, a testator by his will directed his executors to pay 3000*l.* as he should by Where no trust appears on the will and no fraud.

3. If a testator, by his will, devise an estate, and the devisee, so far as appears on the face of the will, is intended to take the beneficial interest, and the testator leaves a declaration of trust not duly attested, and not communicated to the devisee and assented to by him in the testator's lifetime, the devisee is the party entitled both to the legal and beneficial interest: for the estate was well devised by the will, and the informal declaration of trust is not admissible in evidence (a). This doctrine, of course, does not interfere with the well-known rule, that a testator may, by his will, refer to and incorporate therein any document which at the date of the will has an actual existence, and is thus made part of the will.

Where the devisee is made by the will a trustee, and the testator leaves an informal declaration of trust.

4. Should the testator devise the estate in such language that the will passes the legal estate only to the devisee, and manifests an intention of not conferring the equitable, in short, stamps the devisee with the character of trustee, and yet does not define the particular trusts upon which he is to hold; in this case, no paper deed appoint, and subsequently by deed appointed the 3000*l.* to certain children, and the Court established the gift to the children on the ground that the deed referred to the will, and was part thereof, and in the nature of a codicil. It does not appear whether the deed had been proved with the will, but it might have been, as, though a deed in form, it was of a testamentary character. If the deed was not proved, or assumed to have been proved, it is difficult to find any principle upon which the case can be supported from the brief statement of it in the report.

In Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 1, a testator devised all his real estate, charged with debts and legacies, in strict settlement, and gave a legacy of 20,000*l.* to Sir Wm. Wyndham; by a deed poll of even date with his will, the testator declared that the 20,000*l.* was given to Sir Wm. Wyndham upon trust for Lord Clare. "The deed poll," adds Mr. Cox, the reporter, "does not appear to have been proved as a testamentary paper;" and according to the same report, Lord Hardwicke decreed that the legacy of 20,000*l.* given to Sir Wm. Wyndham, and by the codicil declared to be in trust for Lord Clare, was a subsisting legacy. It might be inferred from this statement, that Lord Hardwicke admitted the deed poll as a declaration of trust; but it will be observed that he calls it a codicil, and from the report of the same case in Ambler, p. 33, we learn the facts, viz., that Lord Clare was out of the jurisdiction, and Lord Hardwicke declined to entertain the question as to Lord Clare's right in his absence; but the counsel, for all parties, desiring his Lordship to determine whether, assuming the legacy to be valid, it was to be paid out of the real or personal estate, his Lordship held, that as the will contained a general charge of legacies and the gift by the codicil, though not attested according to the Statute of Frauds, was a legacy, it was raisable primarily out of the personal estate, and then out of the real estate. This was the only point determined by him. [And see Re Fleetwood, 15 Ch. D. at p. 603.]

The dictum of Lord Northington, in Boson v. Statham, 1 Eden, 514, is clearly not law; see Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 151; Muckleston v. Brown, 6 Ves. 67; Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 519; and see Puleston v. Puleston, Finch, 312.

(a) Adlington v. Cann, 3 Atk. 141; Juniper v. Batchellor, 19 L. T. N.S. 200; and see Stickland v. Aldridge, 9 Ves. 519; and the observations of Sir J. L. K. Bruce in Briggs v. Penny, 3 De G. & Sm. 547.

not duly attested (except of course papers existing at the date of the will, and incorporated by reference) will be admissible to prove what were the trusts intended (a). Nor will the devisee be allowed to retain the beneficial interest himself; but while the legal estate passes to him, the equitable will, according to the date and terms of the will, result to the testator's heir-at-law or general residuary devisee (b).

Personal estate.

5. So if by will, personal estate be given upon trusts to be afterwards declared, the testator cannot by any instrument not duly executed as a will, and a fortiori he cannot by parol, declare a valid trust, but the equitable interest will result to the next of kin, or pass to the residuary legatee (c). [And the same rule will be applied if the bequest be on the face of the will a beneficial one, but the legatee undertakes to hold upon trusts to be afterwards declared (d).

6. But where personal estate was by codicil given to A. "to be applied as I have requested him to do," and an unsigned memorandum was written out by A. at the time of the execution of the codicil containing the wishes of the testator, V. C. Hall allowed the trust to be established by the evidence of A. in support of it (e).]

Admission and rejection of parol evidence as against the title of executors.

7. So if a person before the Act of 11 G. 4. & 1 W. 4, c. 40, had been simply appointed executor, which conferred upon him a title to the surplus beneficially, averment was not admissible to make him a trustee for the next of kin (f). But apparently, the authorities established that if from any circumstance appearing on the face of the will, as the gift of a legacy to the executor, the law presumed only that he was not intended to take the surplus beneficially, the executor might rebut that presumption by the production of parol evidence (g), when of course the next of kin

Lib. it appears there was no notice of the trust upon the will, Reg. Lib. 1772, A. Fol. 137. In Boson v. Statham, 1 Eden, 508, the devisees were described as trustees, but this circumstance was not adverted to by the counsel or the Court.

might fortify the presumption by opposing parol evidence in contradiction. Where, however, the will itself invested the executor with the character of trustee, as by giving him a legacy "for his trouble," or by styling him a "trustee" expressly, the primâ facie title to the surplus was then in the next of kin, and parol evidence was not admissible to disprove the express intention (a). By the Act referred to, an executor is made primâ facie a trustee for the next of kin (b). But where there are no next of kin the title of the executor, as against the Crown, is not affected by the statute, and the old law applies (c). But if the executor be stamped by the will with the character of trustee, and there are no next of kin, the Crown will take (d). And of course, whether there be next of kin or not, if it appear from the whole will that the executors were intended to take beneficially, the statute is excluded (e).

Fraud.

8. An exception to the rule, that parol trusts cannot be declared upon an estate devised by a will, exists in the case of fraud. The Court will never allow a man to take advantage of his own wrong, and therefore if an heir, or devisee, or legatee, or next of kin, contrive to secure to himself the succession of the property through fraud, the Court affects the conscience of the legal holder, and converts him into a trustee, and compels him to execute the disappointed intention.

Case of fraud in heir.

Thus if the owner of an estate hold a conversation with the heir, and be led by him to believe that if the estate be suffered to descend, the heir will make a certain provision for the mother, wife, or child or the testator, a Court of Equity, notwithstanding the Statute of Wills, will oblige the heir to make a provision in conformity with the express or implied engagement; for the heir ought to have informed the testator, that he, the heir, would not hold himself bound to give effect to the intention, and then the testator would have had the opportunity of intercepting the right of the heir by making a will (f).

So if a father devise to his youngest son, who promises that if the estate be given to him he will pay 10,000*l.* to the eldest son, the Court, at the instance of the eldest son, will compel the youngest son to disclose what passed between him and the testator, and if he acknowledge the engagement, though he pray the benefit of the statute in bar, he will be a trustee for the eldest son to the extent of 10,000*l* (a). In devisee.

And so, generally, if a testator devise real estate or bequeath personal estate to A., the beneficial owner upon the face of the will, but upon the understanding between the testator and A. that the devisee or legatee will as to a part or even the entirety of the beneficial interest hold upon any trust which is lawful in itself, in favour of B., the Court, at the instance of B., will affect the conscience of A., and decree him to execute the testator's intention (b). But in this, as in other cases, if it appear that A. was not meant to be a trustee, but to have a mere discretion, the Court cannot convert the arbitrary power into a trust (c). In legatee.

[9. But where the bequest was on the face of the will a beneficial one, and the understanding between the testator and the legatee was, that the legatee should take the property as trustee upon trust to deal with it according to further directions which the testator was to give by letter, and the testator subsequently wrote letters containing the directions, but never sent them or communicated their contents to the legatee, it was held that the legatee was a trustee for the next of kin; and it was considered to be essential for the validity of the trust that it [Intention not communicated.] should be communicated to the legatee in the testator's lifetime, and that he should accept the particular trust (a).

Engagement to execute an unlawful trust.

10. It often happens that a proposed devisee enters into an engagement with the testator in his lifetime to execute a secret trust of an unlawful character, one which the policy of the law does not allow to be created by will. In this case the Court will not suffer the devisee to profit by his fraud, but on proof of the fact raises a resulting trust in favour of the testator's heir-at-law. If, therefore, a testator devise an estate in words carrying upon the face of the will the beneficial interest, and obtain a promise from the devisee either expressed or tacitly implied that he will hold the estate upon trust for a charitable purpose, the heir-at-law, as entitled to a resulting trust, may bring an action against the devisee, and compel him to answer whether there existed any such understanding between him and the testator; and if the defendant acknowledge it, he will be decreed a trustee for the plaintiff, and to convey the estate to him accordingly (b).

Devise may be good as to one and void as to another.

11. Where a devise is to several persons as tenants in common, it may be void as to one to whom the testator's unlawful intention was communicated in his lifetime, and good as to the others who were not privies to his intention (c). But if there be a joint devise to two, one of whom has by active fraud procured the devise, the other cannot claim under the fraud, but the devise will be void as to both (d).

Devise not void because devisee means to execute the unlawful trust.

12. Where no trust is imposed by the will, and no communication was made in the testator's lifetime, the devise will be good, although the devisee may, notwithstanding the absence of legal obligation, be disposed from the bent and impulse of his own mind, to carry out what he believes to have been the testator's wishes (e).

[Admission by one joint tenant.]

13. Where property was devised to four persons as joint tenants, and one of them in his will made certain statements which pointed to a secret trust, it was held that these statements could not affect the right of the survivor of the joint tenants, and in the absence of other evidence his representatives were held to be entitled to the property (a).]

An engagement to hold an indefinite part of the estate upon an unlawful trust.

14. A devise may be a beneficial one upon the face of a will, but there may have existed an understanding between the testator in his lifetime and the devisee, that, without any particular part of the estate being specified, such portions of it as the devisee, in the exercise of his discretion, might think proper, should be applied to a charitable purpose. Under such circumstances the heir of the testator would have a right to interrogate the devisee whether he has exercised that discretion, and to call for a conveyance of so much as the devisee may have made subject to the unlawful purpose (b).

Defendant must discover what the secret trust was.

15. In the above cases it is not a sufficient answer to an action by the heir for the defendant to say that the secret trust is not for the plaintiff, for thus the devisee makes himself the judge of the title. The trust may be for a charity, and if so, the beneficial interest would result for want of a lawful intention, or the equitable interest might, on some other ground, enure to the heir as undisposed of (c). If the defendant deny the trust by his answer, the fact in this, as in other cases of fraud, may be established against him by parol evidence (d).

Engagement to execute a trust and no trust declared.

16. It is clear that if the devisee enters into an engagement with the testator to execute an unlawful trust, the heir may bring an action, and claim the beneficial interest; but suppose the devise is a beneficial one upon the face of it, and the testator communicates his will to the devisee, and requests him to be a trustee for such purposes as the testator shall declare, which the devisee undertakes to do, but the testator afterwards dies without having expressed any trust, it seems that in this case also the devisee will not be allowed to take the beneficial interest, but the heir-at-law will be entitled (e).

Case of devisee made a trustee on face of the will, and parol declaration of trust for a stranger.

17. Another case, distinct from all the preceding, is where a testator devises an estate to persons as trustees, but no trusts are declared by the will, so that the equitable interest would, upon the face of the instrument, result to the heir-at-law, and the testator inform the devisees that his intention in making the devise is, that they shall hold the estate in trust for certain persons, which the devisees undertake to do. Will the Court, under such circumstances, compel the devisees to execute the parol intention, or will the equitable interest result to the heir? In favour of the parol trust, it will be argued that the testator left his will in the form in which it appears, under the impression that his object, verbally communicated, would be carried out, and that the trust can therefore be supported, on the ground of mistake in himself, or fraud in the devisees in not apprising the testator that the trust could not be executed. To this the answer is, that, upon the face of the will, the equitable interest results to the heir-at-law, and that, if the testator has not disposed of the equitable interest, as required by the statute, the Court cannot make a will for him, on the plea of mistake or fraud (a): that the Court has interfered in the case of fraud in those instances only where the devisee taking the beneficial interest under the will, was the contriver of the fraud, and, as no man may take advantage of his own wrong, the Court compels the devisee to execute the intention fraudulently intercepted: but in the case supposed, the legal estate only is in the devisees, while the beneficial interest is in the heir-at-law, who is wholly disconnected from the fraud. What jurisdiction, therefore, has the Court to act upon the conscience of the heir, to deprive him of that estate, which has not been devised away according to the Statute of Wills? and how can the trustees for the heir be held to be trustees for another in the absence of all fraud on the part of the heir? It would seem, upon principle, that where a trust results upon the face of the will, the circumstance of an express or implied promise on the part of the devisee to execute a certain trust is not a sufficient ground for authorising the Court to execute the trust as against the heir-at-law (b).

(a) Newburgh v. Newburgh, 5 Madd. 364.

(b) The cases upon the subject are Pring v. Pring, 2 Vern. 99; Crooke v. Brooking, 2 Vern. 50, 107; Smith v. Attersoll, 1 Russ. 266; Podmore v. Gunning, 7 Sim. 644. Other cases are not uncommonly referred to, which really have no application,—as Jones v. Nabbs, Gilb. Eq. Rep. 146 (but there the money passed, and the parol trust was declared in the life-time of the testator); Inchiquin v. French, 1 Cox, 1; Metham v. Devon, 1 P. W. 529; as to which last two cases, see the observations at pages 57 and 58 supra.

Case of parol declaration of trust of a legacy for a stranger.

[18. However, in a recent case in Ireland where a pecuniary legacy was given "to be disposed of by the legatee in a manner of which he alone should be cognizant, and as contained in a memorandum which the testator should leave with him," and the testator before the execution of the will verbally informed the legatee of the manner in which he was to dispose of the legacy, to which the legatee assented, it was held that there was a valid trust, and that the legacy was to be applied according to the testator's directions, to the exclusion of the claims of the residuary legatees (a).]

Effect of the Statute of Mortmain.

19. We have stated the rule that if a testator make a devise carrying the beneficial interest on the face of the will, but it appears from the admission of the devisee or by evidence that the devisee was pledged to the testator to execute a charitable trust, the Court will not allow the execution of such a trust, but will give the estate to the heir-at-law. The question here [arose] whether the Statute 9 Geo. 2 c. 36, which declared a devise "in trust or for the benefit of" a charity to be absolutely void, applied to such a case, so as not only to defeat the equitable interest admitted or proved to have been intended for a charity, but also to make void the devise of the legal estate itself, so that by the effect of the statute, when the fact had been established, the devisee took no interest either at law or in equity. After some conflict of authority (b), it was decided that the devise of the legal estate was good, but that equity would set it aside on the ground of fraud, upon public policy (c). [Now by the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1888 (d), the statute 9 Geo. 2 c. 36 has been repealed, and in lieu thereof it is enacted (e) that every "assurance" of land, which includes testamentary gift (f) "to or for the benefit of any charitable uses," shall be void unless made in accordance with the requirements of the Act. The law therefore in this respect appears to be unchanged.]

The provisions of the Statute of Frauds relating to wills have now been repealed, but the principles established by the foregoing cases with reference to the Statute of Frauds will apply, mutatis mutandis, to the enactments of the Statute of Wills at present in force.

CHAPTER VI.

OF TRANSMUTATION OF POSSESSION.

WHERE there is valuable consideration, and a trust is intended to be created, formalities are of minor importance, since if the transaction cannot take effect by way of trust executed, it may be enforced by a Court of Equity as a contract. But where there is no valuable consideration, and a trust is intended, it has been not unfrequently supposed that, in order to give the court jurisdiction, there must be Transmutation of possession—i.e., the legal interest must be divested from the settlor, and transferred to some third person. But upon a careful examination of the authorities the principle will be found to be, that whether there was transmutation of possession or not, the trust will be supported—provided it was in the first instance perfectly created (a).

The cases upon this subject may be marshalled under the following heads:—

Where some further act is intended.

1. It is evident that a trust is not perfectly created where there is a mere intention of creating a trust, or a voluntary agreement to do so, and the settlor himself contemplates some further act for the purpose of giving it completion (b).

Where the settlor declares himself a trustee.

2. If the settlor proposes to convert himself into a trustee, then the trust is perfectly created, and will be enforced as soon as the settlor has executed an express declaration of trust, intended to be final and binding upon him, and in this case it is immaterial whether the nature of the property be legal or equitable, whether it be capable or incapable of transfer (a).

Gift of husband to his wife.

[3. Prior to the Married Women's Property Act, 1882] a husband was incapable of making a gift of chattels at law to his wife, and, therefore, if he purported to make such a gift, a Court of Equity considered it tantamount to a declaration that the husband would hold in trust for the wife for her separate use. The words of gift need not be in writing, or of a technical description, but must be clear, irrevocable, and complete; the unsupported testimony of the wife on her own behalf will not be sufficient, but the gift may be proved not only by witnesses at the time, but also by the husband's subsequent declaration. "If," observed Sir J. Romilly, M.R., "A. (who has £1,000 Consols standing in his name) says to B., 'I give you the £1,000 Consols standing in my name,' that in my opinion would make A. a trustee for B. It would be a valid declaration of trust for B., though the stock remained in the name of A." (b).

[So where a husband by a deed poll, after reciting that he was beneficially possessed of the ground-rents thereby agreed to be settled, "settled, assigned, transferred and set over unto his wife as though she were a single woman," certain leasehold houses and the ground-rents thereof, it was held that the deed was not void as being an intended assignment, but operated as a declaration of trust (c). So where a husband by deed assigned leaseholds to his "wife, her executors, administrators, and assigns, as her separate estate," it was held that the deed operated as a valid declaration

Wigram expressed himself more cautiously than was necessary, as to the jurisdiction of the Court in enforcing a trust against the settlor himself, and suggested several accompanying circumstances as material to the establishment of such a trust. "If," he said, "the owner of property having the legal interest in himself, were to execute an instrument by which he declared himself a trustee for another, and had disclosed that instrument to the cestui que trust, and afterwards acted upon it, that might perhaps be sufficient; or a Court of Equity, adverting to what Lord Eldon said in Ex parte Dubost, might not be bound to inquire further into an equitable title so established in evidence."

of trust (a). But these cases have since been disapproved of by V.C. Hall, who held that the principle laid down in Milroy v. Lord (b) applies equally to an imperfect gift from husband to wife as to a gift to a stranger, and that such a gift cannot be supported as a declaration of trust (c); and this view has since been adopted in Ireland (d).

4. Now by the recent Act (e), sect. 1, a married woman is capable of acquiring and holding property as her separate property, as if she were a feme sole, without the intervention of any trustee, and a gift by a husband to his wife will now be valid, as well at law as in equity. But by sect. 10 it is provided that nothing in the Act contained shall give validity as against creditors of the husband to any gift by a husband to his wife of any property which, after such gift, shall continue to be in the order and disposition or reputed ownership of the husband, or to any deposit or other investment of moneys of the husband, made by or in the name of his wife in fraud of his creditors, but any moneys so deposited or invested may be followed as if the Act had not been passed.

And since the Act has put a gift by a husband to his wife on a similar footing to a gift to a stranger, the principles governing imperfect gifts to strangers (f) must be equally applied to gifts from husband to wife.]

Where the property is a legal interest.

5. If it be proposed to make a stranger the trustee, and the subject of the trust is a legal interest, and one capable of legal transmutation, as land or chattels which pass by conveyance, assignment, or delivery, or stock which passes by transfer (g), in this case the trust is not perfectly created unless the legal interest be actually vested in the trustee. It is not enough that the settlor executed a deed affecting to pass it, and that he believed nothing to be wanting to give effect to the transaction: the intention of divesting himself of the legal property must in fact have been executed, or the Court will not recognise the trust (h). the distinction," said Lord Eldon, "to be, that if you want the assistance of the Court to constitute a cestui que trust, and the instrument is voluntary, you shall not have that assistance for the purpose of constituting a cestui qui trust, as upon a covenant to transfer stock, &c.; but if the party has completely transferred stock, &c., though it is voluntary, yet the legal conveyance being effectually made, the equitable interest will be enforced by this Court (a)." If, however, the settlor purport to transfer the legal estate to a trustee, but the trustee afterwards disclaims, the accident of the disclaimer has been held not to vitiate the deed, but the Court will appoint a new trustee (b).

Where the property is a legal interest incapable of legal transfer.

6. If the subject of the trust be a legal interest, but one not capable of legal transfer, then whether we look to principle or authority, there is considerable difficulty. On the one hand, it may be urged that in equity the universal rule is that the Court will not enforce a voluntary agreement in favour of a volunteer; and as by the supposition the legal interest remains in the settlor (who therefore at law retains the full benefit), a Court of equity will not in the absence of any consideration deprive him of that interest which he has not actually parted with. On the other hand, as the settlor cannot divest himself of the legal interest, to say that he shall not constitute another a trustee without passing the legal interest, would be to debar him from the creation of a trust in the hands of another at all, and the rule therefore should be that if the settlor make all the assignment of the property in his power and perfect the transaction as far as the law permits, the Court in such a case should recognise the act, and support the validity of the trust.

Bruce observed, "It is upon legal and equitable principle, we apprehend, clear that a person sui juris acting freely, fairly, and with sufficient knowledge, ought to have and has it in his power to make in a binding and effectual manner a voluntary gift of any part of his property, whether capable or incapable of manual delivery, whether in possession or reversionary or howsoever circumstanced." And it is conceived that this principle will for the future prevail (b), [but since debts and legal choses in action have been made transferable at law, questions under this head will be of less frequent occurrence (c).]

Where the subject was incapable of transfer as a debt, and a parol declaration of trust was made to the debtor, who undertook to hold it upon those trusts, it was held to be a valid settlement without any transfer or attempt at transfer (d).

Hall, that as a complete assignment of the policies had been made, the settlement of them was binding and effectual, notwithstanding that the execution by the settlor of a further instrument was contemplated in order to carry out his intention; and the Vice-Chancellor treated the case as

If a settlor assign all his personal estate with a power of attorney, the deed, being perfect and all that was intended, will pass a promissory note notwithstanding the want of indorsement, which is required for giving it currency (b).

Subject partly incapable of transfer.

8. If the subject of the settlement be partly incapable of legal transfer, and partly capable, and that part which is capable of transfer is not transferred, in this case all has not been done that might have been done, and no trust is created. Thus where there was a mortgage in fee and the mortgagee assigned the debt with a power of attorney, but did not convey the mortgaged lands, though they were legally transferable, it was held that the settlement was incomplete (c). [But where debts due on bills of sale were assigned to trustees, with power to sue for and get in the debts and execute all necessary assurances, but without any express assignment of the securities, it was held that the debts were completely assigned, and the settlor having got them in, the trustees were creditors against his estate for the amount (d).]

let in any equities arising in the interval before the notice is given (a).]

Where the property is an equitable interest.

10. If the subject of the trust be an equitable interest, then on the authority of Sloane v. Cadogan (b) a valid trust is created when the settlor has executed an assignment of it to a new trustee; for an equitable interest is capable of transmission from one to another; and here the Court finds the relation of trustee and cestui que trust established without the necessity of calling on the settlor to join in any act for giving it completion.

The late Vice-Chancellor of England questioned the case of Sloane v. Cadogan upon this point (c); but in Kekewich v. Manning (d), Lord Justice K. Bruce observed, "Suppose stock or money to be legally vested in A. as a trustee for B. for life, and subject to B.'s life interest for C. absolutely; surely it must be competent to C. in B.'s lifetime, with or without the consent of A., to make an effectual gift of C.'s interest to D. by way of pure bounty, leaving the legal interest and legal title untouched. If so, can C. do this better or more effectually than by executing an assignment to D.?"

These principles have since been acted upon (e), and Sloane v. Cadogan may be regarded as law. It had been before contended that the assignment operated by way of contract, and as there was no consideration the Court could not enforce it; but the rule now is, that the assignment passes the equitable estate (f).

(f) Donaldson v. Donaldson, 1 Kay, 711. "If," Sir J. Wigram on one occasion observed, "the equitable owner of property, the legal interest of which is in a trustee, should execute a voluntary assignment, and authorise the assignee to sue for and recover the property from that trustee, and the assignee should give notice thereof to the trustee, and the trustee should accept the notice and act upon it, by paying the interest and dividends of the trust property to the assignee during the life of the assignor, and with his consent, it might be difficult for the executor or administrator of the assignor afterwards to contend that the gift of the property was not perfect in equity," 1 Hare, 471. The Vice-Chancellor here enumerates all the safeguards and confirmatory acts of which the transaction was capable, but it must not be inferred that if some of these were wanting the trust would not be supported.

[The rule above stated was held not to apply where the deed was not an absolute assignment, but took effect only by way of equitable charge, for then the transaction depended only upon contract, which could not be enforced in favour of a volunteer; Re Earl of Lucan; 45 Ch. D. 470.]

Where new trust is created without new trustees.

11. In other cases a person entitled to an equitable interest, instead of assigning it to new trustees, has directed the old trustees to stand possessed of it upon the new trusts (a), and, of course, it has been considered quite immaterial whether the settlor selected new trustees or was content with the original trustees.

Assignment to a stranger for his own benefit.

12. In other cases the owner of an equitable interest has simply assigned it to a stranger for the stranger's own benefit (b), which also in principle is the same as Sloane v. Cadogan, for there can be no difference between the gift of an equitable interest to A. himself and the gift of it to B. in trust for A.

Case of particular mode intended, but not effectual.

13. If the settlor intend to make the settlement in one particular mode which fails, the Court will not go out of its way to give effect to it by applying another mode; as if the settlement be intended to be made by transfer of the legal estate, the Court will not hold such intended but ineffectual transfer to operate as a declaration of trust, for then every imperfect instrument would be made effectual by being converted into a perfect trust (c).

Meek v. Kettlewell.

14. In a case (d) heard before Sir J. Wigram, and affirmed by Lord Lyndhurst (e), it was held that a voluntary assignment of a mere expectancy (as of an heir or next of kin) in an equitable interest, and not communicated to the trustees, did not amount to the creation of a trust. This was the only point decided, and perhaps a distinction may be said to exist between the settlement of an actual interest and an expectancy, for a trust to be enforced must be perfectly created, whereas any dealing with what a person has not, but only expects to have, must necessarily in some sense be in fieri. (f) However, Sir J. Wigram, in the course of his judgment, denied that any distinction existed between settlements of a legal interest, as in Edwards v. Jones, and of an equitable interest, as in Sloane v. Cadogan, two cases which, both on principle and authority, ought not to be confounded.

Notice unnecessary.

15. Great importance was also attached by his Honour to the circumstance that notice of the assignment was not given to the trustees. But notice in these cases is not indispensable. As against the settlor, an equitable interest is perfectly transferred without notice. It is only as between purchasers that the service of notice on the trustee, or the want of it, has a material effect upon the transfer (a).

[Addition to trust property.]

[16. Where trustees voluntarily added certain sums to the settled share of a beneficiary, under an erroneous impression as to the construction of a will, they were held to have constituted themselves trustees for the beneficiary, but not on the trusts of the will as construed by the Court (b).]

Settlement retained in settlor's possession.

17. If a person execute a voluntary settlement, which is duly sealed and delivered at the time, but the settlor keeps it in his possession and never parts with it, the settlement is nevertheless as binding as if it had been handed over to the parties entitled (c). But in the case of a conveyance upon a sale, though the deed be duly sealed and delivered, and the word "escrow" be not used, yet if it be retained in the hands of the vendor's solicitor it has no operation until handed over to the purchaser on payment of the purchase-money (d). The distinction is that in the former case nothing remains to be done, but in the latter case the substance of the agreement on one side, viz. the payment of the purchase-money, is still to be performed.

Where donee incurs expense in respect of the property.

18. Though a settlement be voluntary at the time, and the legal estate do not pass, yet if the donee with the knowledge and sanction of the donor incur expense in respect of the property upon the faith of the gift, the donee is no longer regarded as a volunteer, but, in the character of purchaser, may call for a conveyance of the legal estate (e).

out transmutation of possession, be once executed, it cannot be revoked by a subsequent voluntary settlement (a), and the circumstance that the legal estate which was vested in the trustee becomes afterwards by some accident revested in the settlor is immaterial, as he will take it as trustee (b). But if the voluntary settlement be in trust for the settlor for life, and then in trust for others, but subject to such debts as the settlor may leave, the settlor may in effect nullify the settlement by creating new debts (c). [And where a settlor covenanted that he would in his lifetime, or his executors should after his decease, settle certain specific stocks or others of equivalent value, and, reserving a life interest to himself, declared himself to be trustee, it was held, notwithstanding the use of the words of futurity, that a present complete settlement was intended, and was binding on the settlor (d).]

Fraud.

20. A voluntary settlement, though complete on the face of it, may be set aside in equity, where obtained by undue influence (e), or where it was not intended to take effect in the events which have actually happened, and was therefore executed under a mistake (f).

But in case of lands may be defeated by a sale.

21. A voluntary settlement of land by way of trust, perfectly created, is liable, under 27 Eliz. cap. 4, like a settlement of the legal estate, to be defeated by a subsequent sale to a purchaser, even with notice (g). And the cestui que trust can neither obtain

Div. 619, it was held that a settlement of leaseholds by assignment was not voluntary, although the deed contained no covenant by the trustees to pay the rent or perform the covenants of the lease under which the premises were held, on the ground that the trustees came under a responsibility for payment of rent and performance of the covenants, which might be such a responsibility, that a lessee might be actually willing to pay money to get rid of it. This case arose under 27 Eliz. cap. 4; but the doctrine laid down in it has no application to cases arising under 13 Eliz. cap. 5; Re Ridler, 22 Ch. Div. 74; and see Ex parte Hillman, 10 Ch. surplus proceeds of sale after satisfying the mortgage (a)]. But chattels personal (in which respect they differ from chattels real) (b) are not within the statute 27 Eliz. c. 4, relating to purchasers, and therefore a voluntary settlement of chattels personal cannot be defeated by a subsequent sale (c). But voluntary deeds may acquire a validity by matter ex post facto, as by a sale or mortgage by the volunteer on the footing of the voluntary deed, and this doctrine has been extended to the disposition for valuable consideration of any equitable interest (d).

13 Eliz. c. 5.

22. A voluntary settlement, whether of real or personal estate, may be defeated by the operation of 13 Eliz. c. 5, which makes all instruments devised and contrived of "fraud, covin, collusion, or guile," with intent to delay, hinder, or defraud creditors, utterly void as against the creditors "disturbed, hindered, delayed, or defrauded," but the Act is not to extend to any estate or interest in lands, chattels, &c., assured or to be assured on "good consideration and bonâ fide" to any person not having notice of covin, fraud, or collusion.

Deeds invalid as against creditors.

Upon the construction of this statute it has been held, that where the settlor was insolvent at the time (e), or substantially indebted (f), or the object of defeating creditors may be inferred from a person settling his whole property, real and personal, and so depriving himself of the means of paying an existing debt (g), a voluntary deed, though supported by the meritorious consideration of providing for a wife or child (h), and though made in pursuance of a verbal ante-nuptial promise (i), and though it was a settlement of the purchase money, or of an annuity in lieu of purchase money upon a sale (a), is fraudulent as against creditors, (though only general creditors without any lien (b), or creditors under a voluntary post obit bond (c)). sufficient to meet (a), and the settlement was bonâ fide, the deed cannot be impeached. The indebtedness of the party at the time is only one circumstance of evidence upon the question of fraud, and under all the circumstances the Court may see that no fraud was intended or can be presumed (b). On the other hand, though the settlor was perfectly solvent at the time, yet if he executed the settlement with a view of withdrawing the bulk of his property from the reach of his creditors in the event of insolvency, which is in his contemplation, as when a person about to embark in a hazardous business makes a settlement on his wife and family to guard against the consequences, the settlement is void (c).

What creditors can set aside the deed.

24. If it can be proved that the settlor contemplated, in fact, a fraud upon subsequent creditors, the deed can no doubt be set aside at their instance, though the settlor was not indebted at the date of the deed, or the debts which did exist have since been paid (d). But where fraud is merely presumed from the want of consideration and the indebtedness of the party, the settlement is deemed fraudulent only as against those creditors who were such at the date of the settlement (e); and if those creditors have since been satisfied, the intention of defrauding them is rebutted (f). But when the deed has once been set aside as fraudulent against a creditor who was such at the time, other subsequent creditors are allowed to come in pro ratâ (g): and as subsequent creditors have this equity, they may themselves, though this was formerly doubted (h), institute proceedings to set aside the deed, so long as any debt incurred at the date of the deed remains unsatisfied (i);

and where the subsequent creditor proves such a debt to be still in existence, but does not shew the insolvency or substantial indebtedness of the settlor at the date of the deed, the Court in its discretion may direct an inquiry (a).

[The mere abstaining from suing for a period less than that required to raise a bar under the Statute of Limitations, as for ten years, will not prevent the creditors from setting aside the deed (b)].

Whether settlements of stock, &c., within 13 Eliz. c. 5.

25. It was formerly held that settlements of stock, policies of insurance, &c., which were not liable to be taken in execution at the suit of a creditor, were exempt from the operation of the Act, and therefore that settlements of them could not be defeated (c). But now that by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, such interests are liable to execution, or to be charged by a judge's order, the distinction must be considered as obsolete (d).

[Bankruptcy.]

[26. Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, (e) a fraudulent conveyance of a person's property, or any part thereof, is an act of bankruptcy, as also is any conveyance of property which would be void as a fraudulent preference, and by section 47 a voluntary settlement is void as against the trustee in bankruptcy if the settlor become bankrupt within two years; and if the settlor become bankrupt within ten years it is void, unless the parties claiming under the settlement can show (f) that he was solvent at the time without the aid of the property comprised in the settlement, and that the interest of the settlor in the settled property passed to the trustee of the settlement on the execution thereof. And in estimating the solvency of the settlor the value of the life interest which he takes under the settlement must be regarded (g). But the section does not apply to the case of a gift of money to a son made for the purpose of enabling him to commence business on his own account (h); and it is not retrospective so far as it differs from section 91 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (i). section includes "any conveyance or transfer of property." A deed declaring trusts of shares intended to be transferred, but not containing any covenant by the intending settlor to transfer the shares, was held not to be a settlement within the meaning of the section (a).

[Settlement of future property on marriage.]

27. Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (b), a covenant or contract made in consideration of marriage for the future settlement on the settlor's wife or children of any property wherein he had not at the date of the marriage any estate or interest, and not being property of the wife, is on his becoming bankrupt before the property is actually transferred pursuant to the covenant or contract, void against the trustee in the bankruptcy.]

Whether a Court of equity will enforce specific performance of agreements under seal where there is no valuable consideration.

28. As every agreement under hand and seal carries a consideration upon the face of it, and will support an action at law, the inference has not unfrequently been drawn, that equity in such a case, though the trust was not perfectly created, will specifically execute the contract in favour of volunteers (c). But equity never enforced a covenant to stand seised to the use of a stranger in blood; and, if we examine the authorities, we shall find there is very little ground in support of the position; and it is now well settled that a voluntary covenant, notwithstanding the solemnity of the seal, will not be specifically executed (d).

But a voluntary covenant to pay a sum to A. in trust for B. has been allowed to create a debt in favour of B.; Fletcher v. Fletcher, 4 Hare, 67; Ward v. Audland, 16 M. & W. 862; Cox v. Barnard, 8 Hare, 310; Williamson v. Codrington, 1 Ves. 511; and see Bridge v. Bridge, 16 Beav. 320. But as the ground of this is, that the covenant is perfect at law and the covenantee could recover upon it, it seems to follow that where only nominal damages would be given a law, a Court of Equity would not give more.

A voluntary bond or covenant creates a debt, which will be paid before legatees, and even at the expense of specific legatees, Patch v. Shore, 2 Drew. & Sm. 589; though after creditors for value, Watson v. Parker, 6 Beav. 288; Dening v. Ware, 22 Beav. 188; Hales v. Cox, 32 Beav. 118; and before interest allowed by the general orders of the Court on debts not carrying interest, Garrard v. Dinorben, 5 Hare, 213.

Meritorious consideration.

29. It has also been sometimes supposed that where the trust is imperfectly created, yet the Court, without proof of valuable consideration, will act upon meritorious consideration, as payment of debts, or provision for a wife or child (a).

Agreement founded thereon not enforced against the settlor.

30. After much conflict of authority (b), it may now be considered as settled that an agreement founded on meritorious consideration will not be executed as against the settlor himself (c).

How far enforced as against parties claiming under him.

31. As regards parties claiming under the settlor, it was always admitted, that had the settlor sold the estate or become indebted, the equity of the cestui que trust claiming on the ground of meritorious consideration, would not bind a purchaser or creditors (d). But if he subsequently made a voluntary settlement, or died without disposing of the estate by act inter vivos, then the old cases were that the equity would attach as against the volunteers under the settlement (e), a devisee or legatee (f), the heir-at-law

And the same principle has been applied to a voluntary promissory note, Dawson v. Kearton, 3 Sm. & Gif. 191. But though a voluntary promissory note can, if circulated, be recovered upon at law by a bonâ fide holder, yet it is conceived that the original payee cannot recover if the maker prove want of consideration; and if this be so, then, as equity follows the law, this debt should not be allowed in equity; see Vez v. Emery, 5 Ves. 141; Hill v. Wilson, 8 L. R. Ch. App. 901; Curteis v. Adams, W. N. 1875, p. 53. In one case a person gave his promissory note to a trustee, for the settlor's natural daughter, and deposited the title deeds of an estate in the hands of the trustee to secure the debt, and the M. R. held that a valid trust had been created of the amount. Arthur v. Clarkson, 35 Beav. 458. [And a delivery of a promissory note to the donor's executor to be handed over after the donor's death to a third person on her fulfilling a condition was held to create a trust; Re Richards; Shenstone v. Brock, 36 Ch. D. 541.]

A bond or covenant which is voluntary at first, may acquire support from valuable consideration by matter ex post facto. Payne v. Mortimer, 1 Giff. 118; 4 De G. & J. 447. [For reference to decisions at law shewing that the assignor of a debt is liable to be sued by the assignee, if the assignor defeats his own assignment by getting in or releasing the debt, and that if the assignor, being a settlor, could have been sued at law by the trustees, it follows that his estate is liable in equity, see Re Patrick (1891), 1 Ch. 82, 88, per Lindley, L. or next of kin (a), with however the saving clause, that the Court would not have enforced it even as against these classes of persons, where they too could plead meritorious consideration (as if they were the children of the settlor), without a previous inquiry by the Master, whether they had any adequate provision independently of the estate (b). At the present day, however, it is conceived that even as against volunteers claiming under the settlor, with or without an adequate provision, a voluntary agreement, whether under seal or not, cannot be enforced on the mere ground of meritorious consideration (c).

No trust unless there be an intention to create one.

32. It is obviously essential to the creation of a trust, that there should be the intention of creating a trust, and therefore if upon a consideration of all the circumstances the Court is of opinion that the settlor did not mean to create a trust, the Court will not impute a trust where none in fact was contemplated (d).

Field v. Lonsdale.

Thus, where a person, having deposited in a savings bank as much money in his own name as the rules allowed, deposited a further sum in his name as trustee for his sister, but without making any communication to her; and it appeared that he made such deposit with a view of evading the rules of the bank, and not to benefit his sister; and by the Act of Parliament he retained the control of the fund; the Court held that no trust was created (e). So, if a person indorse and hand over promissory notes with the intention of making a testamentary disposition, the transaction does not create a trust inter vivos (f).

Money scrivener.

33. As the business of a money scrivener is now almost obsolete, and the looking for and procuring investments for the money of clients on landed security is now commonly transacted by solicitors, it has been held that if a sum of money be placed by a client in the hands of a solicitor for investment, the mere deposit will not per se create the relation of trustee and cestui que trust between the solicitor and the client (g). [If the solicitor

CHAPTER VII.

OF THE OBJECT PROPOSED BY THE TRUST.

TRUSTS, with reference to their object, are Lawful or Unlawful: the former, such as are directed to some legitimate purpose; the latter such as are in contravention of the policy of the law.

SECTION I.

OF LAWFUL TRUSTS.

Intention.

1. The general and primâ facie rule is, that the intention of the settlor is to be carried into effect (a).

No objection to a trust because the legal estate cannot be so dealt with.

2. If the object of the trust do not contravene the policy of the law, the mere circumstance that the same end cannot be effectuated by moulding the legal estate is no argument that it cannot be accomplished through the medium of the equitable. The common law has interwoven with it many technical rules, the reason of which does not appear, or at the present day does not apply; but a trust is a thing sui generis, and, where public policy is not disturbed, will be executed by the Court.

Fee upon a fee.

3. In legal estates, for example, a fee cannot, except by executory devise, be limited upon a fee—that is, cannot be shifted from one person to another; but this modification of property was allowable in uses, and by the statute of Hen. 8. has gained admittance into legal estates, and the shifting of the fee from one person to another is now matter of daily occurrence in settlements by way of trust (b).

Contingent remainders

4. At law, except in executory devises, a freehold contingent limitation must be supported by a freehold particular estate, and if the contingent limitation do not vest at the determination of the particular estate, it is extinguished (a), but to trusts the rule is held not to be applicable, or, as the doctrine is expressed, the legal estate in the trustees is sufficient to support all the equitable interests (b).

Limitations of chattels.

5. At law a chattel real can by executory devise only, and not by deed, and a chattel personal can neither by will nor by deed, be limited to one person for life, with a limitation over to another; but in trusts a chattel interest, whether real or personal, can be subjected to any number of limitations, provided there be no perpetuity (c).

Trusts for a church or chapel.

6. If a testator before the Statute of Mortmain (9 G. 2. c. 36) had devised to one that served the cure of a church, and to all that should serve the cure after him, all the tithes, profits, &c.: here, as the successive curates were not a body corporate, they were incapable of taking the legal estate, but equity carried the intention into effect by way of trust, and decreed the devisee or heir to hold in trust for the persons intended to be benefited (d). So on the erection of a chapel, the endowment cannot, without an Act of Parliament, be transmitted at law to the successive preachers and their congregations, but the ordinary mode of accomplishing the object is by vesting the legal estate of the property in trustees (with a power of renewing their number on vacancies by death, &c.), upon trust to permit the preacher and congregation for the time being to have the use and enjoyment of the chapel.

Trust of the poor of a parish.

7. The limitation of an estate to the poor of a parish would at law, be void (e), because the rules of pleading require the claimants to bring themselves under the gift, and no indefinite multitude, without public allowance, can take by a general name; but by way of trust they are capable of purchasing, for they assert no title in themselves, but only require the trustees to keep good faith (f).

Trust of an advowson for the parishioners.

8. Again, an advowson cannot at law be given to a parish which is not a corporate body, but it may be vested in trustees, upon trust for the "parishioners and inhabitants," that is, the parishioners, being inhabitants (a) of a parish. [It has been said that a] trust of this kind is not a charity, but is [to be] administered on the footing of an ordinary trust, and that application must be made to the Court, not by way of information, but by action (b). The case of an advowson held in trust for a parish has been called an anomalous one. A valid trust, for the benefit of a parish or the parishioners for ever, cannot be made, except on the ground that it is a charity; and the reasoning by which it [has been] sought to bring it under this head is, that the parishioners who elect get no personal benefit, but it is a mode of selecting the charity trustee, for the incumbent who performs divine service and ministers to the spiritual wants of the parish is in a large sense a trustee for the parish (c). [But in a recent case this has been described as a "far-fetched theory," and it has been held that an advowson is no exception from the general law as to charitable trusts (d).]

Who shall elect the clerk.

9. From the infinite mischiefs arising from popular election (e), the Court, where the settlement does not expressly give the election to the parishioners, or usage has not put such a construction upon the instrument, will infer the donor's intention to have been that the trustees should themselves exercise their discretion in the election of a clerk for the benefit of the parish (f); but if the language of the instrument, or the evidence of common usage, prevent such a construction, then the parishioners, as the cestuis que trust and beneficial owners of the advowson, will be entitled to elect, and the trustees will be bound to present the person upon whom the choice of the electors shall fall (g). Had the point been unprejudiced by decision, Lord Eldon doubted whether the Court could execute such a trust, at least otherwise than cy près (h), but, as authority has now clearly settled that the Court must undertake the trust, notwithstanding the difficulties attending it, the only subject for inquiry is, in what manner a trust of this kind will be executed.

Meaning of "parishioners and inhabitants."

10. The expression "parishioners and inhabitants" is, in itself, extremely vague, and has never acquired any very exact and definite meaning (a); but, this doubt removed, another question to be asked is, are women, children, and servants, who are parishioners and inhabitants, to be allowed to vote? It seems the extent of the terms must be taken secundum subjectam materiam, with reference to the nature of the privilege which the cestuis que trust are to exercise (b), and, if so, none should be admitted to vote, who, from poverty, infancy, or coverture, are presumed not to have a will of their own (c). In a case, where the election was given to "the inhabitants and parishioners, or the major part of the chiefest and discreetest of them," it was held that by chiefest, was to be understood those who paid the church and poor rates, and by discreetest, those who had attained the age of twenty-one (d); but Lord Hardwicke said, that, even where "parishioners and inhabitants" stood without any restriction at all, it was a reasonable limitation to confine the meaning to those who paid scot and lot, that is, who paid to church and poor (e); and so, in a previous case, it seems his Lordship had actually determined (f). The Court of Exchequer adopted a similar construction in the Clerkenwell Case (g), though it does not appear how far the Court was guided in its judgment by the evidence of the common usage (h); and Lord Eldon, in a subsequent case, restricted the election to the same class (i), but his Lordship's decree was possibly founded on the circumstance, that those only who paid scot and lot were admitted to the vestry (j): not that, for the purposes of election, the vestry is representative of the parish (k), but in one of the oldest documents the trust was said to be for "the parishioners of the said parish at a vestry or vestries to be from time to time holden for the said parish" (a). But where the instrument creating the trust contains merely the words "parishioners and inhabitants," the Court will not confine the privilege of voting to those paying scot and lot, if it appears from constant usage that the terms are to be taken in a wider and more extensive signification, to include, for instance, all housekeepers, whether paying to the church and poor or not (b). By persons paying to the church and poor must be understood persons liable to pay, though they may not have actually paid (c); but it seems to be a necessary qualification that they should have been rated (d), unless, perhaps, the name has been omitted by mistake (e), or there is the taint of fraud (f). "Rate-payers."

11. With respect to the mode in which the votes are to be taken, it is clear that the election cannot be conducted by ballot, not only on the general principle that the ballot is a form of proceeding unknown to the common law of England (g), but also on the ground, that the right of voting in the election of a clerk is a privilege coupled with a public duty, and the trustees have a right to be satisfied that the voters, in the exercise of their right, have fairly and honestly discharged their duty; whereas in election by ballot there are no means of ascertaining for whom each particular elector voted (h). The choice of the candidate must therefore be determined by one of the modes known to the common law, viz. either by poll or a show of hands (i). However, the cestuis que trust may expressly agree among themselves that they will abide by the declaration of the result of the ballot, and will ask no questions how the individual votes were given; or such a contract may be inferred from long and clear antecedent Mode of electing.

Bacon intimated an opinion that as under the modern mode of voting by ballot papers, no objection could now be taken as in the case of Faulkner v. Elger, ubi sup. to a ballot on the ground that it afforded no opportunity for a scrutiny, an election by that means would be valid.]

usage (a). But it is said an agreement of this kind can apply only to each particular election as it occurs, for any one parishioner has a right to insist that the coming election shall be conducted on a different principle; it would be a bold thing to say, that the parish of to-day could bind the parish of to-morrow to deviate from the original and legitimate mode (b).

[Where an election had taken place, the Court, although of opinion that the proceedings in vestry determining the mode of election had been illegal and irregular, refused to set the election aside, in the absence of evidence that the election itself had been improperly conducted, or that any voter had been prevented from recording his vote (c).]

Trusts for accumulation.

12. Again, upon principles founded on the Law of Tenure, the freehold in præsenti must be vested in some person in esse; but under the system of trusts, which are wholly independent of feudal rules, a settlor may give directions for an accumulation of rents and profits, and it does not vitiate the trust that there is no ascertained owner of the equitable freehold in possession (d).

Trusts for accumulation must not lead to a perpetuity.

But trusts for accumulation must be confined within the limits established against perpetuities. A settlor is permitted (by analogy to the duration of a regular entail under a common law conveyance) to fetter the alienation of property for a life or lives in being and twenty-one years; and the power of preventing the enjoyment of property, by directing an accumulation of the annual proceeds, is restricted to the same period. If the trust exceed this boundary it is void in toto, and cannot be cut down to the legitimate extent (e).

Phipps v. Kelynge.

But no objection exists on the ground of a perpetuity, where rents, though directed to be accumulated, are applicable as a vested interest de anno in annum. Thus, where a testatrix devised a term which had thirty-three years to run, upon trust, from time to time, to lay out the profits in the purchase of lands to be settled upon A. for life, remainder to B. in tail, remainders over, here, inasmuch as the cestuis que trust could at any time call for the investment of the rents in land, and when B. attained his age, and could suffer a recovery, A. and B. were entitled to call for the assignment of the lease, it was held the trust was good (a). And generally, although there be an accumulation directed, which might by possibility extend beyond a life in being and twenty-one years, yet if the whole beneficial interest in the accumulations must by the terms of the settlement become vested within a life in being and twenty-one years, there is no perpetuity, for in this case the beneficiaries may immediately upon the vesting, and therefore within the allowed limits, put an end to the accumulation (b).

Thellusson Act.

13. The 39 & 40 Geo. 3, c. 98, commonly called the Thellusson Act, or Lord Loughborough's Act, has further restricted the period of accumulation, by limiting it to "the life or lives of any grantor or grantors, settlor or settlors; OR the term of twenty-one years from the death of the grantor, settlor, devisor, or testator; OR during the minority, or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living, or in ventre sa mere, at the time of the death of the grantor, devisor, or testator; OR during the minority, or respective minorities, of any person or persons who, under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will, codicil, or other assurance directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues, and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated."

Act embraces both simple and compound accumulation.

The following points have been resolved upon the construction of this Act—1. The statute embraces simple as well as compound accumulation. By the former is meant the collection of a principal sum by the mere addition of the annual proceeds, while the interest upon the accumulating fund either results undisposed of to the settlor or his representative, or passes to the residuary devisee or legatee. Compound accumulation is, where not only the income de anno in annum is added altogether, but the fund is further increased by the interest upon the income (c). 2. The Act applies, though the accumulating fund be from the first a vested interest, so that not the right to the enjoyment, but only Applies to case of suspended enjoyment, though the right to the enjoyment be vested.

(a) Phipps v. Kelynge, 2 V. & B. 57, note (b). In Curtis v. Lukin, 5 Beav. 147, the accumulation was held to be void, as the respective interests of the parties could not be ascertained until the time of renewal arrived. The parties might or might not agree upon a distribution amongst themselves during the interim, but this could not affect the legal construction.

the actual enjoyment, is suspended; as where a settlor directs rents to be accumulated to raise a certain sum for A., to be paid to him on the completion of the accumulation; so that A. has a vested interest in the rents as they arise (a). 3. An accumulation can be directed for one only of the periods allowed by the statute, and not for two or more of the periods combined (b). 4. The accumulation, though directed to commence not at the testator's death, but at some subsequent period, must still terminate at the expiration of twenty-one years from the testator's death (c), and the term of twenty-one years is to be reckoned exclusive of the day on which the testator died (d). 5. If the trust exceeds the limits prescribed by the statute, but not the limits allowed by the common law, the accumulation will be established to the extent permitted by the Act, and will be void for the excess only (e). 6. If an accumulation be not expressed but implied, as in the gift of a residue to all the children of A., and no life estate given to A. himself, so that the class cannot be ascertained until his death, and the fund must accumulate during the interim, it is the better opinion, as originally decided by Lord Langdale (f), that the prohibition of the statute was meant to apply (g). The late Vice-Chancellor of England observed that the statute was intended only to put an end to accumulations expressly directed (h); and in a subsequent case before him so decided (i). And the same view was adopted by Sir J. Romilly, Master of the Rolls (j). But the decision in the last case in which the Master of the Rolls so held was reversed on appeal by the Lord Chancellor and Lord Justices, and though the reversal rested upon the ground that as the will was worded, an accumulation was expressly directed (k), the Lord Chancellor felt himself called upon to say that the distinction taken by the Master of the Rolls between an accumulation expressed and an accumulation implied was untenable; and he justly remarked as to the case of infancy (cited in support of the opposite view), that if of age, the infant, instead of spending, might accumulate the rents, and the Court did no more than exercise a discretion for the infant, which was a very different thing from creating a suspense fund to go to somebody who had no title during the accumulation.

To whom the excess shall belong.

The statute proceeds to declare, that "the produce of the property, so long as the same shall be directed to be accumulated contrary to the provisions of the Act, shall go to and be received by such person or persons as would have been entitled thereto if such accumulation had not been directed."

Subsequent limitations not accelerated.

14. If there be a series of limitations of real estate, and one of them be upon trust to accumulate the rents beyond the limits allowed by the Act, the subsequent limitations are in general not accelerated; but the interim limitation, which is void under the Act, will result for the benefit of the heir-at-law (a); and if the resulting trust be a chattel interest, carved out of real estate, it will devolve, on the death of the heir, on the personal representative of the heir (b); and if the resulting interest be an estate pur autre vie, it is the better opinion that it also goes to the heir's personal representative (c). But under the Wills Act, 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 25, if the will contain a residuary devise, and there is no evidence of a contrary intention on the face of the will, the void accumulations will go to the residuary devisee.

In personal estate.

15. In personal estate, if there be a residuary legatee, the excess beyond the allowed period of accumulation will fall into the residue (d), [the will being construed as if, independently of the Thellusson Act, the testator had directed that the accumulation should cease at the end of twenty-one years (e),] and where

Residue.

16. If the subject of the accumulation be the income of the residue itself, the void accumulation will, according to the nature of the residue, i.e., real or personal, result to the heir-at-law or to the next of kin (b).

Charge.

17. If an estate be devised subject to a void direction to accumulate in such terms that the void accumulation, if valid, would have been construed a mere charge, it will, like any other charge which fails (c), sink for the benefit of the devisee (d).

Exceptions from the Act.

18. Lastly, the statute provides, that "nothing in the Act contained shall extend to any provision for payment of debts (e) of any grantor, settlor, or devisor, or other person or persons, or for raising portions for any child of the settlor or devisor, or any person taking an interest under the settlement or devise, or to any direction touching the produce of timber or wood." The words "any other person or persons" authorise a grantor, settlor, or devisor to provide for the debts of any stranger whomsoever (f); and the exception in the statute extends to liabilities of a testator though no debt had actually accrued at the time of his death (g). By children must, of course, be understood exclusively legitimate children (h). And the accumulation to be protected by the clause must be a provision for raising portions out of the corpus, not an accumulation of the corpus itself, for the purpose of making a gift of the aggregate fund (i), and must be a provision for children certain, and not a chance limitation in favour of any child that may happen to survive certain persons not necessarily standing in the relation of parent and child, but uncles or aunts, &c. (a). By "taking an interest under the devise" is meant a substantial interest. A small annuity, for instance, to the parent, would not justify an accumulation of the residue of the rents beyond the limits of the Act for raising portions for the children (b); and it was once considered that it was necessary that an interest should be taken not merely under the will generally, but under the particular gift, devise or bequest, which contained the provision for accumulation (c); but this view has been since overruled, so that now, if the person take a substantial interest in any property, under the will, it is sufficient (d). The portions intended by the Act are not necessarily portions created by the deed or will directing the accumulation, but may be portions pre-existing (e).

[19. A direction by will to pay out of the income of the testator's property the premiums on a policy of assurance effected on the life of another person by the testator in his lifetime, or to be effected after his death on the life of a person in esse at his death is not an accumulation within the Act, and may be continued after the expiration of 21 years from the testator's death (f). And a discretionary trust for application of surplus income during the life of an annuitant in improving a landed estate and maintaining houses thereon is not an accumulation within the Act (g).] [Direction to keep up a policy.

investment could not be accumulated (a); and the Act applies to an accumulation of rents of leaseholds in England, but belonging to a testator domiciled in Ireland (b).

SECTION II.

ON UNLAWFUL TRUSTS.

Trusts against the policy of law.

1. THE COURT will not permit the system of trusts to be directed to any object that contravenes the policy of the law (c). Thus, if the trust of a chattel be limited to A. and his heirs, it will nevertheless be personal estate, and vest in the executors (d), for to hold the contrary would shake the first principles of law and confound the great landmarks of property. So the trust of a chattel cannot be entailed, as if it be limited to A. and the heirs of his body, with remainder to B., the absolute interest vests in A., and the remainder to B. is a nullity (e). But trusts of terms attendant upon the inheritance, while they existed, were always excepted from the rule; for these, partly to protect the estate from secret incumbrances, and partly to keep the property in the right channel (f), were made in equity to follow, as shadows, the devolution of the freehold (g).

Illegitimate children.

2. Again, a person cannot settle property upon trust for illegitimate children to be thereafter born, since this tends to immorality, but the declaration of trust is void, and the beneficial interest results to the settlor (h). [Primâ facie a gift to children includes only legitimate children (i),] but illegitimate children born at the date of the settlement may take under the description of children if there were no legitimate children at the time (a), or the illegitimate children are otherwise identified as personæ designatæ (b). But a gift to A. for life, with remainder to his child or children, will not be taken to designate an illegitimate child of A. born previously to the date of the will, though A. had no legitimate child at the date of the will, and was 57 years old, and so unlikely to have legitimate children (c).

Trusts for Corporations.

3. So a trust of real estate cannot be declared in favour of a corporation without a licence from the Crown, for the same mischief would follow from putting equitable, as in putting legal, estates into mortmain (d).

Trusts for alien.

4. Where a trust of real estate was, before the late Act (e), declared in favour of an alien, the Crown might have claimed the benefit of it by suit in equity, without the form of a previous inquisition, for the subject was sufficiently protected by the decree of the Court (f).

made in accordance with the requirements of the Act. These requirements, shortly stated, are that the assurance must take effect in possession immediately from the making thereof (a), and must be without any power of revocation, reservation, condition, or provision for the benefit of the assuror or any person claiming under him (b), except the following, viz., a grant or reservation of a peppercorn or other nominal rent, or of mines, minerals, or any easement, covenants or provisions as to buildings, streets, drainage, or nuisances, a right of entry on nonpayment of rent, and stipulations of a like nature (c); but the same benefits must be reserved to persons claiming under the assuror as to the assuror himself. If the assurance is of land or personal estate, other than stock in the public funds, it must be enrolled in the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature within six months after its execution (d), and must also, except in the case of copyholds, be by deed executed in the presence of at least two witnesses (e). Where the uses are declared by a separate instrument, that instrument, and not the assurance, must be enrolled, but the enrolment must in that case be within six months after the making of the assurance (f).

If the assurance is made in good faith for full and valuable consideration, which consideration may consist wholly or partly of a rent, rent-charge, or other annual payment, with or without a right of re-entry for nonpayment (g), the above are the only requirements; but in other cases it is further required that the assurance, if of land or personal estate other than stock in the public funds, must be made at least twelve months before the death of the assuror (h), and if of stock in the public funds, must be by transfer at least six months before such death (i). The Act also contains provisions under which the omission to enrol an instrument within the requisite time may be remedied, if such omission has arisen from ignorance or inadvertence, or through the destruction or loss of the instrument by time or accident, and if also the assurance to be validated was made in good faith, for full and valuable consideration, to take effect in possession without any power of revocation, etc., except such as is authorised, and possession or enjoyment is held under such assurance (a).]

Secret trust for assuror.

6. Where lands were conveyed to trustees for a charity by a deed duly enrolled, and without any reservation upon the face of it to the grantor, but upon a secret trust that the deed should not operate until after the settlor's death, the deed was upon bill filed, declared void, and decreed to be set aside (b). But such a secret trust must be proved, and retention of possession of the deed by the settlor during his life, though a circumstance of evidence, does not necessarily imply a previous fraudulent agreement (c).

[Parks, schools, and museums.]

[7. The recent Act exempts from its operation assurances for the purposes only of a "public park," a "schoolhouse" for an "elementary school," or a "public museum" as therein defined; but gifts by will and voluntary assurances must be executed not less than twelve months before the death of the testator or assuror, and must be enrolled in the books of the Charity Commissioners within six months after the death of the testator, or in case of a deed, the execution of the deed, and the quantity of land assured by will must not exceed twenty acres for a park, or two acres for a museum, or one acre for a school (d).

[Universities, colleges, and religious and other societies.]

8. Assurances to or in trust for any of the universities of Oxford, Cambridge, London, and Durham, the Victoria University, or any of the colleges or houses of learning within those universities, or the colleges of Eton, Winchester, and Westminster, for the better support or maintenance of the scholars only upon the foundations of the last-mentioned colleges, or the warden, council, and scholars of Keble College, and also assurances (otherwise than by will) made in good faith for full and valuable consideration to trustees on behalf of any society or body of persons associated together for religious purposes, or for the promotion of education, art, literature, science, or other like purposes, of land not exceeding two acres for the erection thereon of a building for such purposes, or any of them, are also exempted from the operation of the Act (e).

[(e) Sec. 7 extending 9 Geo. 2. c. 36, and continuing 31 & 32 Vict. c. 44.]

[Recreation grounds, churches, etc.]

9. The Act, while repealing previous statutes, only deals in a partial manner with the existing exemptions from the operation of the repealed statutes. There are numerous statutes left unrepealed by the Act which contain such exemptions. Thus, for instance, the Act of 22 Vict. c. 27 exempts any grant or conveyance of land to trustees for open public grounds or recreation of adults or playgrounds for children. So also numerous exemptions are contained in the Church Building Acts and other Acts (a). The effect of the recent Act apparently is to continue these exemptions (b).]

Perpetuities.

10. A perpetuity will no more be tolerated under cover of a trust, than when it displays itself undisguised in a settlement of the legal estate (c). "If in equity," said Lord Guildford, "you could come nearer to a perpetuity than the rules of common law would admit, all men, being desirous to continue their estates in their families, would settle their estates by way of trust, which might indeed make well for the jurisdiction of Chancery, but would be destructive to the commonwealth" (d). Thus, if an estate be limited to trustees for 500 years upon the trusts thereinafter declared, and subject thereto in strict settlement, and then the trusts are declared to be to enter and manage the estate during the minority of any tenant for life or in tail, the trusts are void, for the tenant in tail cannot bar them, and they might last for centuries (e). [So if real estate be devised to trustees upon trust to retain a yearly sum out of the rents and profits, and subject thereto the estate is devised in strict settlement, and the trustees are directed during the continuance of the limitations to accumulate the yearly sum, the trust is void (f).]

The limitation of contingent remainders is further controlled by the rule of law which prevents an estate given to an unborn person for life from being followed by any estate in remainder to a child of such unborn person; and contingent remainders obnoxious to this rule will be void, though they might not transgress the

So, again, if a power of appointment amongst the issue be contained in a marriage settlement, the donee of the power cannot appoint to the daughters for their sole and separate use without power of anticipation, for this would tie up the estate beyond the legal limits. While the appointment, therefore, to the daughters is good, the condition in restraint of alienation is void (a). Restraint on anticipation.

11. Should a testator devise his real estate in strict settlement, and then bequeath his personal estate to such tenant in tail as should first attain twenty-one, then, if the tenant in tail at the testator's death be not adult, the event might not occur for a century, and the trust would be void (b). But should a testator bequeath his personal estate upon such trusts as would correspond to the limitations of his real estate, with a proviso that it should not vest absolutely in any tenant in tail unless he attained twenty-one, the trust would be good, for as personal estate cannot descend, the testator must by a tenant in tail have meant a tenant in tail by purchase (c). Strict settlement of chattels.

12. The question often arises in practice whether the trust of one estate to indemnify another estate against a perpetual outgoing be not void for perpetuity, but it has been held in Ireland that such a trust is good, and that the Statute of Limitations does not apply to it (d). Trust for indemnity.

13. Trusts cannot be created with a proviso that the interest of the cestui que trust shall not be alienated (e), or shall not be made subject to the claims of creditors (f). And if it can only be ascertained that the cestui que trust was intended to take a vested interest, the mode in which, or the time when, the cestui que trust was to reap the benefit, is perfectly immaterial, and Restriction on alienation.

the entire interest may either be disposed of by the act of the cestui que trust, or may enure for the benefit of his creditors by operation of law on his bankruptcy. Thus, if the trust be to apply a fund for a person's "support, clothing and maintenance" (a), or to pay the interest of a fund to a person for life "at such times and in such manner as the trustees shall think proper" (b), or "from time to time as and when it shall become due and payable" (c), or "in such smaller or larger portions, at such times immediate or remote, and in such way and manner as the trustees shall think best" (d), the discretion of the trustees is determined by the bankruptcy of the cestui que trust, and the entirety of the life estate enures for the benefit of the creditors. Even where the trustees were directed to pay the interest of a sum "to A. for life, or during such part thereof as the trustees should think proper, and at their will and pleasure, but not otherwise," and so that A. should not have any right, title, claim, or demand other than the trustees should think proper; and after A.'s decease, to pay the interest to his widow for her life, and after her decease to assign the principal and "all savings or accumulations of interest, if any," to the children, the Court thought, that, taking the whole instrument together, the trustees had no power to withhold and accumulate any portion of the interest during the life of A., and therefore, on his bankruptcy, the assignees became absolutely entitled (e). The question to be asked in these cases is, On the decease of the cestui que trust would his executor have a right to call upon the trustees retrospectively to account for the arrears? (f). If he would, then the creditors are prospectively entitled to the payments in futuro

Discretionary trust for A., whether determined by A.'s bankruptcy.

Trusts for maintenance, etc.

14. But where a trust is not exclusively for the benefit of the bankrupt, but of the bankrupt and another person, the creditors will, of course, take only so much as was intended for the bankrupt. Thus where real and personal estate was vested by a marriage settlement in trustees upon trust to apply the annual produce thereof "for the maintenance and support of A. B., his wife and children, if any, or otherwise, if they thought proper, to permit the same to be received by A. B. for his life," and A. B. became bankrupt, leaving a wife but no children, the Master of the Rolls said, "There could be no doubt of the intention of the settlement, that the wife should be supported out of the property, and" he was "of opinion that so long as the wife and children were maintained by A. B., the trustees had a discretion to give him the whole income, but that it was their duty to see that the wife and children were maintained; that the assignees took everything, subject to what was proper to be allowed for the maintenance of the wife and children, and that it must be referred to the Master to settle a proper allowance" (a). And where trustees have an arbitrary power of applying or not applying a fund for the benefit of the bankrupt, or of applying the fund in the alternative either for the benefit of the bankrupt or of another person, the bankruptcy will have no effect upon the power (b). Thus, where a fund was given to trustees upon trust to apply the whole or such part of the interest as they should think fit during the life of A., for his support and maintenance, and for no other purpose, it was held that nothing passed to the assignees (c). So where freehold and leasehold property was vested in trustees upon trust for A. B. for life; but if he became bankrupt or insolvent the trustees were, during his life, to apply the annual produce "in and towards the maintenance, clothing, lodging, and support of A. B. and his then present or any future wife and his children, or any of them as the trustees should at their discretion think proper," and A. B. became insolvent, having a wife and children, it was argued that the power in the trustees was destroyed by the insolvency, and that the life estate vested in the assignee; but Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce held that the trustees had a right under the power to appoint in favour of the insolvent, his wife and children, or any of them in exclusion of any other of them, but that any benefit which the insolvent might take would belong to the assignee (d). And even if the trust be for the maintenance of the bankrupt and his wife and his children in such manner as the trustees may think fit, it seems that the trustees may so exercise the power that there shall be nothing tangible for the creditors to lay hold of. Thus where a residuary personal estate was given to the testator's son for life, but if he did any act whereby the interest vested in him would become forfeited to others, the trustees were to apply the annual produce "for the maintenance and support of the son, and any wife and child or children he might have, as the trustees should in their discretion think fit," and the son became bankrupt, having a wife and children, the Vice-Chancellor of England said, "That nothing was of necessity to be paid, but the property was to be applied; and there might be a maintenance of the son, and of the wife and children without their receiving any money at all: that the trustees might take a house for their lodging, and give directions to tradesmen to supply the son and the wife and children with all that was necessary for maintenance, and if so the assignees were not entitled to anything" (a), [and though the trust is to pay to or apply the income for the benefit of the son only, and not of his wife and children, the trustees may exercise their discretion as to the application, and only the overplus remaining unapplied will pass under the gift over (b). In such cases the assignee of the son will be entitled only to such money or property, if any, as may be paid or delivered, or appropriated for payment (c), or delivered by the trustees to the son; but the trustees will be accountable in respect of payments made to him after they have received notice of bankruptcy or assignment (d).] If there be a power not arbitrary but imperative to apply for the benefit of the bankrupt and another, and the trustees refuse to exercise the power, so that a simple trust arises, the creditors will take a moiety (e), and if by the death of the other person the bankrupt becomes the only object of the power, the creditors will take the whole (f).

Limitation over on alienation.

may give real or personal estate to A. for life (a), with a proviso that on alienation, bankruptcy, or insolvency (b), it shall shift over to B.; [and where property was by an instrument dated in 1862, limited to A. for life or until he should be outlawed or declared bankrupt or become an insolvent debtor within the meaning of some Act of Parliament for the relief of insolvent debtors, his interest was held to cease on the presentation of a petition for liquidation under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, by a firm of which he was a member followed by acceptance by the creditors of a composition (c).] And if the trust be for A. for life, remainder to B. for life, or until bankruptcy, and B. becomes bankrupt in the lifetime of A., the clause takes effect (d). [And if the trust be for A. for life and the proviso that on his charging or encumbering the property or becoming bankrupt, the gift to him shall be absolutely forfeited, and the subsequent gifts accelerated, the proviso will be good, although there is no person capable of taking under the subsequent gifts (e). But a gift of real estate to A. her heirs and assigns, subject to a proviso determining her estate, in the event of her bankruptcy, and limiting the estate over, in that event, to other persons is an absolute gift to A., and the proviso is void for repugnancy (f). The general opinion (g) has until recently been that real or personal estate might be given to a person absolutely with a partial restraint on the power of alienation, as for instance a condition against alienation within a particular period, but in a late case Pearson, J., in a carefully considered judgment, held such a condition to be void (h).]

brought into operation by a deed of inspectorship (a), and a like clause on "alienation" (b) will extend only to a disposition by the act of the party, and not to a transfer by operation of law, as bankruptcy (c), unless it can be collected from the context that the term was intended by the settlor to have so wide a signification (d); and a warrant of attorney to enter up a judgment which is followed by a charging order will not be an act of alienation, unless the charge was immediately in the contemplation of the parties at the time of giving the warrant (e); and [even under the law prior to the Married Women's Property Act, 1882] the marriage of a feme was not an alienation of a chose en action to the extent of her equity to a settlement out of it (f); but where real estate was held in trust for A. and her assigns for her life, with remainder over, with a proviso, that, if she did anything whereby she might lose the control over the income, the life estate should "cease as fully as it would by her actual decease," and she married, so that the husband obtained the control over the income, the limitation over to the remainderman took effect (g). future income, it was held that the assignment being confined to the arrears was valid (a); and a power of attorney to receive the income and a charge upon the income will not be a forfeiture, unless it can be proved that the power of attorney and charge were meant to be applied to future income, and not to be confined to arrears already accrued (b); and an assignment in general words will not comprise a property which if attempted to be assigned would become forfeited (c). [Where, however, there was a residuary gift to A. for life, with remainder to B., with a general provision against alienation by B. in A.'s life-time, and a mortgage was made by B., "subject nevertheless, to the said proviso or condition in the will contained," it was held by the late M. R. that there was no forfeiture inasmuch as the restriction meant in substance "I charge if I can charge, and I do not if I cannot charge," and consequently as B. had no power to charge the property was never charged at all (d). But if a memorandum of charge be made and accepted by the person in whose favour it is made, it will be effectual to create a forfeiture although no claim is made under it, and a disclaimer of the charge after it has once been accepted will not avail to prevent the forfeiture (e).

An assignment of the assignor's life estate to trustees for the benefit of the assignor, until he otherwise directs, has been held not to create a forfeiture so long as no direction is given by the assignor inconsistent with his actual enjoyment of the life estate (f).

Where the forfeiture of an annuity was to arise on the annuitant doing or suffering anything which would deprive him of the right to receive the annuity, a garnishee order served on the trustees was held to create a forfeiture (g), and where the gift was to a married woman for life for her separate use with restraint on anticipation, and from and after her decease, or "on her anticipating" the income, then over, it was held that anticipating could not be read as "attempting to anticipate," and therefore an assignment of the life interest being wholly ineffectual did not cause a forfeiture (h).]

but the act of the insolvent himself (except it was on the petition of a creditor (a)), and therefore came within the meaning of a restraint against "alienation" (b). But a mere declaration of insolvency to lay a foundation for a bankruptcy was not an alienation or attempt at alienation (c). Under the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, a petition for liquidation was a voluntary parting with the bankrupt's interest (d); [and a debtor's petition under The Bankruptcy Act, 1883, will it is conceived have the same effect.]

Limitation over on bankruptcy of settlor himself.

18. A person cannot settle his own property on himself, with a limitation over in the event of his own bankruptcy (e). But a husband may on his marriage thus settle a fund of his own to the extent of the wife's fortune received by him, for this, though apparently a settlement by him, is in substance a settlement of the money advanced by the wife (f); and, indeed, a person may on marriage, without regard to the wife's fortune, limit his own property to himself for life or until alienation, [either voluntary (g) or involuntary by operation of law in favour of a particular creditor (h),] and then over in favour of the wife or children, for they are purchasers for value and there is no fraud upon any one.

Direction to purchase presentation for a particular person.

19. It is not unusual to find a clause in a will directory to trustees to purchase a presentation in favour of some particular object; but, it seems, if the purchase be made with the intention of presenting the cestui que trust, though the patron himself was ignorant of the purpose in view (i), it falls within the enactment against simony (j). either directly or indirectly; and, the object being determined upon at the time of the purchase, the construction put upon the transaction by the Court is, that the patron presents indirectly by selling to a person who purchases with the sole intention of presenting.

Purchase of Advowson.

20. The purchase of an advowson upon the footing that immediate possession shall be given is clearly simoniacal; and yet, notwithstanding the stringent words of the Acts against simony, and of the declaration to be made by the clerical purchaser, such transactions are of too frequent occurrence. As any stipulation for the resignation of the present incumbent would be illegal and could not be enforced, the purchaser is obliged to rely upon the honour of the vendor, the purchase money in the meantime being impounded in the hands of trustees, to be paid over upon the intentions of the parties being carried into effect.

Insurances for life.

21. It has been ruled that the statute relating to insurances on lives does not prohibit an insurance on the life of A. in the name of B. upon trust for A. when both names appear upon the policy (a). But an insurance on the life of A. by B. a creditor, not on his own account, but as a trustee for C., who has no interest in the life, would, it is considered, be void.

Income tax.

22. The income tax Act (b) avoids all contracts or agreements by which one person undertakes to pay the income tax of another; but this does not prevent a settlor from vesting an estate in trustees upon trust to pay "all taxes affecting the lease" (meaning inclusively the income tax), and subject thereto for A. for life (c).

Splitting votes

23. Fictitious, fraudulent, or collusive conveyances for the purpose of creating votes for members of parliament, as when the conveyance is in form only, and there is a private arrangement between the parties that no interest shall pass, are null and void; but if A., bonâ fide and without any secret understanding in derogation of the deed, though for the purpose of multiplying votes, convey to B. in trust for a number of persons as tenants in common, that they may thereby acquire a qualification, the deed is unimpeachable (d).

Immoral trusts.

24. Trusts adverse to the foundation of all religion and subversive of all morality are, of course, void, and not enforceable by the Court (a).

[Superstitious purposes.]

[25. Trusts for superstitious purposes, as for saying masses or requiems for the souls of the dead, are void (b).]

Consequences to the settlor of creating a trust with an unlawful purpose.

26. Where a trust is created for an unlawful and fraudulent purpose, the Court will neither enforce the trust in favour of the parties intended to be benefited, nor will assist the settlor to recover the estate (c).

Property settled with an unlawful purpose may be recovered by persons claiming under the settlor.

27. But a distinction was taken by Lord Eldon between a bill filed by the author of the fraud himself, and by a person taking through him, but not a party to the fraud (d), and this distinction is supported by other authority (e). And the settlor himself may take proceedings for recovering the property, where the illegal trust failed to take effect, so that no trust arose, and, the trustees having paid no consideration, the equitable interest resulted (f).

[Existence of cestui que trust.]

28. [A trust may take effect and be recognised by the Court although there is no ascertained person who can, as cestui qui trust, enforce the execution of it. Thus a devise on trust for the maintenance of the testator's horses and dogs was held valid, although it was not a charity, and, as the Court observed, the execution of it could not be enforced by any one (a). So, as we have seen, where there is a discretionary trust to apply money for the benefit of a particular person, though the cestui que trust cannot enforce the payment of any part of the money to him, yet the trustee can so apply it, and the persons interested in remainder are entitled only to the unapplied surplus (b). And although a trust for keeping up family tombs is in general void as tending to a perpetuity (c), yet a direction to an executor to apply a sum of money in erecting a monument to a person already deceased may be valid (d), although it is difficult to say who would be the cestui que trust to enforce it (e), and] a trust for keeping in repair a painted window or monument in a church is valid as a charitable gift, for it is for the interest of the public that the ornaments of the church should not be allowed to fall into decay (f). [So a trust for repairing and keeping in repair a parish churchyard has also been upheld as a good charitable gift (g).]

Personalty bequeathed to a charity.

29. If a testator bequeath his personalty generally to such charitable purposes as the trustees should think proper, the trustees can exercise the power as to the pure personalty (h). [But the trustees cannot under the power apply the impure personalty to charitable institutions authorised to hold property of that description, unless the testator has indicated in the will that charities of that nature are among the objects intended to be benefited (a).

The cases cited in support of this proposition were those in note (c) infra, which do not, it must be admitted, bear it out, as they turned on the question of perpetuity. But it nevertheless may be open to doubt whether there can be any trust for a mere private purpose, which does not concern any human being. In Cooper-Dean v. Stephens, it is to be noticed that the testator bequeathed his horses and dogs to the trustees themselves, so that it could not be contended that the trust was enforceable against them by the owner of the horses and dogs. They held upon a trust for the maintenance of particular chattels belonging to themselves, but upon a resulting trust as to unapplied surplus. But it is conceived that if in such a case the unapplied surplus were given to the trustees beneficially, the trust for the maintenance of the chattels, whether animate or inanimate, would be nugatory.]

[Trust partly for a lawful and partly for an unlawful purpose.]

[30. If property be given upon trust to apply part thereof for an unlawful purpose, and to hold or apply the residue for a lawful purpose, then, if the amount intended to be applied for the unlawful purpose cannot be so far ascertained as to make it clear that there would be a residue applicable to the lawful purpose, the whole gift will fail (b); but the mere fact that the amount to be applied for the unlawful purpose has not been expressly stated in the gift will not make the whole gift void, and the Court will, if it be practicable, ascertain the amount which would have satisfied the unlawful purpose, and thus uphold the gift (c). [(d) Fisk v. Attorney-General, Dawson v. Small, Hunter v. Bullock, Re Williams, Re Birkett, Re Vaughan, ubi sup., all of which were cases of trusts for the maintenance of family tombs out of the income of a fund and for the application of the surplus for a charitable purpose. It is difficult to see upon what principles these cases rest; and in Re Birkett, the late M. R., Sir G. Jessel, sitting as a judge of first instance, intimated that had the case been unfettered by authority, he should have arrived at a different conclusion. In Fisk v. Attorney-General, the case was argued on the footing that the whole fund was given for the lawful purpose charged with a portion for an unlawful purpose, and the charge failing, the gift of the whole for the lawful purpose was good; and this would seem to have been the view adopted by V. C. Wood, for he observed, p. 527: "I think I ought, in this instance (if the gift of the residue had been exclusive of the amount required for the repair of the grave), to have ascertained the amount required for the void purpose, but the better construction is, that the whole of the gift is to be taken by the rector and churchwardens."

So again in Hunter v. Bullock and Dawson v. Small, both before V. C. Bacon, the trust for keeping up the tombs was treated as being merely honorary: that is, "an obligation either to be performed or not, as the persons to whom the custody of the money was given thought fit," and the gift for the lawful purpose was held to be "certain in amount" (i.e., of the whole income), "subject only to the fulfilment of the honorary trust."

CHAPTER VIII.

IN WHAT LANGUAGE A TRUST MUST BE DECLARED.

A PERSON may declare a trust either directly or indirectly: the former by creating a trust eo nomine, in the form and terms of a trust; the latter, without affecting to create a trust in words, by evincing an intention, which the Court will effectuate through the medium of an implied trust (1).

SECTION I.

OF DIRECT OR EXPRESS DECLARATIONS OF TRUST.

General rule.

1. In creating a trust, a person need only make his meaning clear as to the interest he intends to give, without regarding the technical terms of the common law in the limitation of legal estates. An equitable fee may be created without the word "heirs," and an equitable entail without the words "heirs of the body" (a), provided words be used which though not technical

(a) See Shep. Touch. by Preston, 106.

Distinction between implied trusts, Trusts by operation of law, and Constructive trusts.

(1) The Terms Implied Trusts, Trusts by Operation of Law, and Constructive Trusts, appear from the books to be almost synonymous expressions; but for the purposes of the present work the following distinctions, as considered the most accurate, will be observed:—An implied trust is one declared by a party not directly, but only by implication; as where a testator devises an estate to A. and his heirs, not doubting that he will thereout pay an annuity of £20 per annum to B. for his life, in which case A. is a trustee for B. to the extent of the annuity. Trusts by operation of law are such as are not declared by a party at all, either directly or indirectly, but result from the effect of a rule of equity, and are either—1. Resulting trusts, as where an estate is devised to A. and his heirs, upon trust to sell and pay the testator's debts, in which case the surplus of the beneficial interest is a resulting trust in favour of the testator's heir; or, 2. Constructive trusts, which the Court elicits by a construction put upon certain acts of parties, as when a tenant for life of leaseholds renews the lease on his own account, in which case the law gives the benefit of the renewed lease to those who were interested in the old lease.

are yet popularly equivalent, or the intention otherwise sufficiently appears upon the face of the instrument.

Equitable fee may be devised without the word heirs applied to it.

2. If an estate be devised unto and to the use of A. and his heirs, upon trust for B. without any words of limitation, B. takes the equitable fee; for the whole estate passed to the trustees, and whatever interest they took was given in trust for B. (a). But if an estate be conveyed by deed unto and to the use of a trustee and his heirs, in trust for the settlor for life, and after his death upon trust for his children simply, without the word heirs, [or, in deeds executed since the 31st December, 1881, the words "in fee simple" or "in tail" (b)], the children by analogy to legal limitations take an estate for life only (c). Should renewable leaseholds for lives be conveyed by deed to trustees and their heirs upon trust for A., it has been held that from the nature of an estate pur autre vie, A. takes the absolute interest (d).

Force of technical terms.

3. But though technical terms be not absolutely necessary, yet where technical terms are employed they shall be taken in their legal and technical sense (e). Lord Hardwicke indeed once added the qualification, "unless the intention of the testator or author of the trust plainly appeared to the contrary (f)." But this position has since been repeatedly and expressly overruled, and at the present day it must be considered a clear and settled canon that a limitation in a trust, perfected and declared by the settlor, must have the same construction as in the case of a legal estate executed (g).

Rule in Shelley's case applicable to trusts.

4. As the rule in Shelley's case is not one of construction, that is, of intention, but of law, and was established to remedy certain mischiefs, which, if heirs were allowed to take as purchasers, would be introduced into feudal tenures; it might be thought, that, as trusts are wholly independent of tenure, they ought not to be affected by the operation of the rule; and the cases of Withers v. Allgood (a), and Bagshaw v. Spencer (b), seem to lend some countenance to the doctrine. But not to mention that Lord Hardwicke himself appears in Garth v. Baldwin (c) to have doubted the position advanced by him in Bagshaw v. Spencer, other subsequent authorities have now established the principle, that although the rule may not be equally applicable to trusts, it shall be equally applied (d).

But in order to vest the fee in the ancestor under this rule, the word "heir" must be used, not in the sense of persona designata, i.e. a particular individual, but as a term of succession so as to transmit the estate to the heir for the time being for ever. If, therefore, land be devised to a trustee in trust for A. for life, and after his decease in trust for the person who shall then be his heir or heiress and his or her heirs, in this case A. takes a life estate only, and the heir or heiress takes the fee simple by purchase (e); and of course the rule does not apply, if the legal estate be vested in trustees for the life of A. in trust for him, and the legal remainder after the death of A. be limited to the heirs of A.'s body, for here, as the life estate and the remainder are of different qualities (viz., one equitable and the other legal), they cannot unite (f).

It was therefore, an executory trust, and the question was not whether in mere equitable estates a life interest resulting to the heir-at-law would unite with a limitation to the heirs of his body, but whether according to the true construction of the will the settlement was not meant to be executed in such a form as to make the heirs of his body purchasers. In this light the question was one of intention, and not of legal operation. The case was subsequently affirmed on appeal by Lord Cranworth, and it is conceived substantially, though not in terms, upon the ground above indicated as the true principle: see 4 De G. M. & G. 574.

Trusts executed and trusts executory distinguished.

5. We have said, that if technical words be employed, they must be taken in their legal and technical sense; but as to this a distinction must be drawn between trusts executed, and trusts that are only executory; for to trusts executed the position is strictly applicable, but in the case of trusts that are executory it must be received with considerable allowance.

A trust executed is where the limitations of the equitable interest are complete and final; in the executory trust, the limitations of the equitable interest are intended to serve merely as minutes or instructions for perfecting the settlement at some future period (a).

The two confounded by Lord Hardwicke in Bagshaw v. Spencer.

The distinction we are considering was very early established, and was recognized successively by Lord Cowper (b), Lord King (c), Lord Talbot (d), and by no one more frequently than by Lord Hardwicke himself (e): yet in Bagshaw v. Spencer (f) Lord Hardwicke almost denied that any such distinction existed. But in a subsequent case (g) his Lordship felt himself called upon to offer some explanation. "He did not mean," he said, "in Bagshaw v. Spencer, that no weight was to be laid on the distinction, but that, if it had come recently before him, he should then have thought there was little weight in it, although he should have had that deference for his predecessors, as not to lay it out of the case, not intending to say that all which his predecessors did was wrong founded, which he desired might be remembered."

The distinction now established.

But whatever doubts may formerly have existed upon the subject, they have long since been dispelled by the authority of succeeding judges. "The words executory trust," said Lord Northington, "seem to me to have no fixed signification. Lord King describes an executory trust to be, where the party must come to this Court to have the benefit of the will. But that is the case of every trust. The true criterion is this. Wherever the assistance of this Court is necessary to complete a limitation, in that case, the limitation in the will not being complete, that is sufficient evidence of the testator's intention that the Court should model the limitations; but where the trusts and limitations are already expressly declared, the Court has no authority to interfere, and make them different from what they would be at law" (a). And Lord Eldon observed, "Where there is an executory trust, that is, where the testator has directed something to be done, and has not himself completed the devise, the Court has been in the habit of looking to see what was his intention; and if what he has done amounts to an imperfection with respect to the execution of that intention, the Court inquires what it is itself to do, and it will mould what remains to be done, so as to carry that intention into execution" (b). [And in a recent case the late M. R. observed "It is called an executory trust, where the testator instead of expressing exactly what he means, that is, filling up the terms of the trust, tells the trustees to do their best to carry out his intention. In that way it is executory, that if he has not put into words the precise nature of the limitations, he has said in effect, 'Now there are my intentions, do your best to carry them out'" (c).]

Executory trusts in marriage articles distinguished from the like trusts in wills.

6. We proceed to the inquiry to what extent in executory trusts a latitude of construction is admissible; and to draw the line correctly, we must again distinguish between executory trusts in marriage articles, where the Court has a clue to the intention from the very nature of the contract, and executory trusts in wills, where the Court knows nothing of the object in view à priori, but in collecting the intention must be guided solely by the language of the instrument.

Occasionally confounded.

This distinction was at first but very imperfectly understood. Because executory trusts under wills admitted a degree of latitude, it was held by some, they were to be treated precisely on the same footing as executory trusts in marriage articles; while, because trusts under wills did not admit an equal latitude of construction, it was held by others that they were not to be distinguished from trusts executed (d). Even Lord Eldon once observed, "There is no difference in the execution of an executory trust created by will, and of a covenant in marriage articles; such a distinction would shake to their foundation the rules of equity" (e). But Lord Manners said he could not assent to this doctrine (a); and Lord Eldon some time after took an opportunity of correcting himself (b).

Distinction drawn by Sir W. Grant.

The distinction we are considering has been put in a very clear light by Sir W. Grant. "I know of no difference," he said, "between an executory trust in marriage articles and in a will, except that the object and purpose of the former furnish an indication of intention which must be wanting in the latter. Where the object is to make a provision by the settlement for the issue of a marriage, it is not to be presumed that the parties meant to put it in the power of the father to defeat that purpose, and appropriate the estate to himself. If, therefore, the agreement be to limit an estate for life, with remainder to the heirs of the body, the Court decrees a strict settlement in conformity to the presumable intention. But if a will directs a limitation for life, with remainder to the heirs of the body, the Court has no such ground for decreeing a strict settlement" (c).

"Heirs of the body" in articles construed first and other sons.

7. To apply the foregoing distinction to the cases that have occurred: if in marriage articles the real estate of the husband or wife be limited to the heirs of the body, or the issue (d) of the contracting parties, or either of them, or to the heirs of the body, or issue and their heirs (e), so that heirs of the body, or issue, if taken in their ordinary legal sense, would enable one or other of the parents to defeat the provision intended for the children, these words will then be construed in equity to mean first and other sons; and the settlement will be made upon them successively in tail, as purchasers (f).

Distinction where the settlement was after the marriage, and where before it.

If the settlement has been already made, then, provided the execution of it was after the marriage, it will be rectified by the articles (g); but if the execution of it was prior to the marriage, the Court will presume the parties to have entered into a different agreement (a), unless the settlement expressly state itself to be made in pursuance of the articles, when that presumption will be rebutted, and the settlement will be rectified (b), or unless it can be otherwise shown that the settlement was intended to be in conformity with the articles, and there is clear and satisfactory evidence that the discrepancy has arisen from mistake (c).

Limitation of the husband's property to the heirs of the body of the wife.

Under the law as it stood prior to the Fines and Recoveries Act (d), a strict settlement was not decreed, where the property of the husband was limited to the heirs of the body of the wife; for this created an entail which neither husband nor wife could bar without the concurrence of the other, and the intent might have been, that the husband and the wife jointly should have the power of destroying the entail (e); but it is conceived, that as to articles executed subsequently to the Act referred to, the case would be otherwise (f).

Where the settlement also contains a limitation to the parent for life, with remainder to first and other sons in tail.

Nor will the Court read heirs of the body as first and other sons, where such a construction is negatived by anything in the articles themselves: as if one part of an estate be limited to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, and another part be given to the husband for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body; for, as it appears the parties knew how a strict settlement should be framed, the limitation of part of the estate in a different mode could only have proceeded from a different intention (g).

Heirs female.

8. It was formerly argued, that daughters in marriage articles were not entitled to the same consideration as sons, on the ground that they do not, like sons, continue the name of the family, and are generally provided for, not by the estate itself, but by portions out of the estate; but it is now clearly settled, that, as they are purchasers under the marriage, and are entitled to some provision, the Court will in their favour construe heirs female to mean daughters (a); and unless the articles themselves make an express provision for them by way of portion, &c. (b), will hold daughters, as well as sons, to be included under the general term of heirs of the body (c), or issue (d). And the settlement will be executed on the daughters, in default of sons, as tenants in common in tail general, with cross remainders between them (e).

Limitation of chattels to heirs of the body.

9. If chattels be articled to be settled on the parents for life, and then on the heirs of the body of either, or both, it seems the chattels will not vest absolutely in the parents, but in the eldest son as the heir, though taking by purchase, and if there be no son, in the daughters as co-heiresses (f); and for the son or daughters to take, it is not necessary that they should survive the parents and become the actual heir (g), unless there be words in the articles to give it to the heirs of the body living at the death of the surviving parent, as "if the parent die without leaving heirs of the body" (h).

Articles to settle chattels on same trusts as real estate.

10. Again, if in marriage articles, a party covenant to settle personal estate upon the trusts, and for the intents and purposes, upon and for which the freeholds are settled, the Court will not apply the limitations to the personal estate literally, the effect of which would be to vest the absolute interest in remainder in the first son on his birth, but will insert a proviso that will have the effect, at least to a certain extent, of making the personal estate follow the course of the real.

Limitations over on dying under 21, or under 21 without issue.

Sir Joseph Jekyll said, the practice of conveyancers was to insert a limitation over on "dying under 21" (i): but Lord Hardwicke conceived the common limitation over to be on "dying under 21 without issue" (j). In The Duke of Newcastle v. The Countess of Lincoln (k), leaseholds were articled to be settled to the same uses as the realty, viz. to A. for life, remainder to A.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainder to B. for life, remainder to B.'s first and other sons in tail male, remainders over. A. died, having had a son who lived only nine months. Lord Loughborough held that the leaseholds had not vested absolutely in the deceased son of A., and ordered a proviso to be inserted in the settlement, that they should not vest absolutely in any son of B. who should not attain 21 or die under that age leaving issue male. From this decision an appeal was carried to the House of Lords (a); but before the cause could be heard, a son of B. having attained 21, the decree was, that the son of B. had become absolutely entitled. Thus the House of Lords decided that the absolute interest had not vested in the first tenant in tail on his birth; but what proviso ought to have been inserted, whether a limitation over "on dying under 21," or "on dying under 21 without issue male," the House in the event was not called upon to determine. The order of the House of Lords in this case was made with the approbation of Lord Ellenborough and Lord Erskine (who took part in the debate), and also of Lord Thurlow (b). But Lord Eldon denied before the House that there was any distinction between articles and wills, and therefore relying upon Foley v. Burnell and Vaughan v. Burslem, two cases upon wills decided by Lord Thurlow, he said, had the cause come originally before him, he should have decreed the absolute interest to have vested in the eldest child upon birth; that assignments had been made of leasehold property under a notion that a son when born would take an absolute interest; and, were the House to sanction the decree of Lord Loughborough, it would shake a very large property (c). However, his Lordship conceived that Lord Hardwicke's doctrine was originally the best, and therefore, recollecting the opinion of that great Judge, the opinion of Sir Joseph Jekyll, and the decision of the Court below, and knowing the concurrent opinions of Lord Ellenborough and Lord Erskine, and also the opinion of Lord Thurlow (whose present sentiments, however, he could not reconcile with the cases of Foley v. Burnell and Vaughan v. Burslem, formerly decided by his Lordship) (d), he bowed to all these authorities; and, though he was in some degree dissatisfied with the determination, he nevertheless would not move an amendment (e).

Personalty cannot be knit to realty entirely.

It must be observed that a settlement of the personalty cannot be made exactly analogous to a settlement of the realty, whether the limitation adopted be "on dying under 21," or "on dying under 21 without issue." For if the former be supposed, then, the object of the articles being to knit the personal estate to the freehold, if the son die under age leaving issue who will succeed to the freehold, the two estates will go in different directions. But if the limitation over be "on dying under 21 without issue," then, if the son die leaving issue, such issue may die under age and unmarried, when the personality will go to the son's personal representative, while the freeholds will devolve on the second son (a).

Joint-tenancy in articles construed tenancy in common.

11. Again, in marriage articles, as joint tenancy is an inconvenient mode of settlement on the children of the marriage (for, during their minorities no use can be made of their portions, as the joint tenancy cannot be severed) (b), the Court will rectify the articles by the presumed intent of the contract, and will permit words that would be construed a joint tenancy at law to create in equity a tenancy in common (c).

Words supplied in articles.

12. In other cases the Court has varied the literal construction by supplying words, as where the agreement was to lay out 200*l.* in the purchase of 30*l.* a year, to be settled on the husband and wife for their lives, remainder to the heirs of their bodies, remainder to the husband in fee, and, until the settlement should be made, the 200*l.* was to be applied to the separate use of the wife; and, if no settlement were executed during their joint lives, the 200*l.* was to go to the wife, if living, but, if she died before her husband, then to her brother and sister; and the wife died before her husband, but left issue; it was held the brother and sister had no claim to the fund, the words "if she died before her husband" intending plainly if she so died "without leaving issue" (d). [The Court has also in a modern settlement supplied a hotchpot clause (e).]

13. It has been held in marriage articles that a trust to provide suitably for the settlor's younger children is not too vague to be executed, but the Court will direct an enquiry what the provision should be (a). Vague provision.

14. Next as to wills; and here, as no presumption arises à priori, that "heirs of the body" were intended as words of purchase, if the executory trust of real estate be to "A. and the heirs of his body" (b), or to "A. and the heirs of his body and their heirs" (c), or to "A. for life, and after his decease to the heirs of his body" (d), the legal and ordinary construction will be adopted, and A. will be tenant in tail. So, where the estate was directed to be settled on the testator's "daughter and her children, and, if she died without issue," the remainder over, the Court said, that, by an immediate devise of the land in the words of the will, the daughter would have been tenant in tail, and in the case of a voluntary devise the Court must take it as they found it, though upon the like words in marriage articles it might have been otherwise (e). How "heirs of the body" construed in executory trusts in wills.

And where a testator directed lands to be settled on his "nephew for life, remainder to the heirs male of his body, and the heirs male of the body of every such heir male, severally and successively one after another as they should be in seniority of age and priority of birth, every elder and the heirs male of his body to be preferred before every younger," Lord Cowper said, the nephew took by a voluntary devise, and, although executory, it was to be taken in the very words of the will as a devise, and was not to be supported or carried further in a Court of Equity than the same words would operate at law in a voluntary conveyance (f). The decision that the nephew was tenant in tail went apparently upon the ground that the words "and the heirs male of the body of every such heir male, severally and successively, &c.," were all included in the notion of an entail, and expressio eorum, quæ tacite insunt, nihil operatur. "A. for life, and heirs male of his body, and their heirs male successively."

And in a more recent case, where the executory trust was for A. generally, with a direction that the trustees should not give up their trust till "a proper entail was made to the heir "Proper entail on the heir male."

male by him," it was determined that A. took an estate tail (a). However, in another case, where the devise was extremely similar, viz., to A. with a direction that the estate should be entailed on his heir male, Lord Eldon, on the assumption that it was an executory trust, and not a legal devise, considered the entail so doubtful that he would not compel a purchaser to accept a title under it (b).

Heirs of the body construed to mean sons, even in wills, where any expression of intention to that effect.

15. But "heirs of the body" will in the case of executory trusts in wills as well as in articles be read first and other sons, provided the testator expressly manifest such an intention, as if he direct a settlement on A. for life "without impeachment of waste" (c), or with a limitation to preserve contingent remainders (d), or if he desire that "care be taken in the settlement that the tenant for life shall not bar the entail" (e), or otherwise show that the direction to settle on A. and the heirs of his body, was not meant to give him a power of disposition over the estate (f); and in one case "heirs of the body" was so construed, where a testator had devised to the separate use of a feme covert for life, so as she alone should receive the rent, and the husband should not intermeddle therewith, and after her decease in trust for the heirs of her body; for, from the limitation to the heirs immediately after the wife's decease, coupled with the direction that the husband should not intermeddle with the estate, the Court collected the intention of excluding the husband's curtesy, an object which could only be accomplished by giving to "heirs of the body" the construction of words of purchase (g).

(f) Thompson v. Fisher, 10 L. R. Eq. 207. It is presumed that the Court attributed an intention to this effect, for if the Court directed a strict settlement, merely on the ground that the trust was executory, it would conflict with the authorities, and with the canon laid down in the House of Lords, that in the case of a will or a deed of gift the intention that the very words mentioned in the instrument as proper for the more complete conveyance are not to be used, must be plainly manifested by the first instrument, and will not be assumed merely because the trust is executory. Sackville-West v. Viscount Holmesdale, 4 L. counsel shall advise" (a), or "as the executors shall think fit" (b), is strong collateral evidence, that something more was intended than a simple estate tail.

Rule in Shelley's case not applicable where the life estate is to the separate use.

Sir L. Shadwell thought that if a testator directed an estate to be settled on a feme covert for life, for her separate use, and at her death on her issue, the feme would not be tenant in tail, for the separate use requiring the life estate to be vested in trustees (c), the equitable estate in the feme could not unite with the legal estate in the issue, and therefore the rule in Shelley's case would not apply (d).

Trevor v. Trevor.

Where the trust was to settle on A. for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his issue in tail male in strict settlement, the Court directed the estates to be settled on A. for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his sons successively in tail male, with remainder to the daughters, as tenants in common in tail male, with cross remainders in tail male, and proper limitations to trustees were inserted to preserve contingent remainders (e). But where a testator devised an estate to C. for life, and on her death to be "strictly entailed on her eldest son J.," the Court directed a settlement on C. for life, with remainder to J. for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail general, with remainder to his daughters as tenants in common in tail general, &c. (f).

"Heirs of the body" and "issue" not of the same import.

16. We may here remark that "heirs of the body" and "issue" are far from being synonymous expressions. The former are properly words of limitation, whereas the latter term is in its primary sense a word of purchase. In several cases the Court appears to have ordered a strict settlement from the use of the term "issue," where, had the expression been "heirs of the body," the estate would probably have been construed an estate tail (g).

Daughters included in "heirs of the body" and "issue."

17. Of course, daughters as well as sons will be included under "heirs of the body" (h), or "issue" (i); for they equally answer the description, and are equally objects of bounty; and where these words are construed as words of purchase the settlement will be made upon the daughters in default of sons, as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between or amongst them (a).

Waste.

18. In executing a strict settlement the Court, unless there be some special words which point to the contrary, will not make the tenant for life dispunishable for waste (b), and a direction to settle to the separate use without power of anticipation is inconsistent with a life estate without impeachment of waste (c).

Limitation to preserve contingent remainders.

Before 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, the Court took care that proper limitations to trustees should be inserted after the life estates for the preservation of contingent remainders (d); and although, by the effect of the Act referred to, contingent remainders are no longer destructible by the forfeiture, merger, or surrender of the previous life estate, the limitations to trustees to preserve may still, it is conceived, be properly interposed, with the view of affording a convenient means of protecting the interests of contingent remaindermen in the event of wilful waste or destruction being committed by the tenant for life before any remainderman comes in esse (e).

First freehold in trustees.

19. In a case occurring before the Fines and Recoveries Act (3 & 4 W. 4. c. 74), where the testator had shown an anxious wish that the power of defeating the entail should be as much restricted as possible, the Court, instead of giving the first freehold to the tenant for life, which would have enabled him to make a tenant to the præcipe, ordered the freehold during his life to be vested in trustees in trust for him (f).

Protector.

However, in a case occurring after the Fines and Recoveries Act, where an estate was vested in a trustee upon trust to execute a strict settlement on Lady Le Despencer and her family, and the Master, to whom a reference was directed, approved of a settlement on Lady Le Despencer for life, &c., but refused to appoint a protector under the 32nd section of the Act, the Court held that, though in certain cases it might be advisable to appoint a protector, there should be special circumstances to warrant it; that the trustee was the "settlor" within the meaning of the 32nd section, and had the power to appoint a protector; and as he did not desire it, the Court, unless there were good reasons to the contrary, would not control his discretion; that a protector under the Act was an irresponsible person, and was at liberty to act from caprice, ill-will, or any bad motive, and might even take a bribe for consenting to bar the entail, without being amenable to the Court, and therefore, on the whole, it was better not to clog the settlement with a protector (a).

Gavelkind lands.

20. Where gavelkind lands are the subject of the executory trust, the circumstance of the custom will not prevent the settlement being made upon the first and other sons successively, for the heirs take not by custom, but under the construction of a Court of Equity, which must be guided by the rules of the Common Law (b).

Where the testator directs a settlement, but formally declares the limitations.

21. Where the Court enlarges and rectifies the will it does so on the ground of the limitations having been imperfectly declared; but if a testator direct a settlement, and be his own conveyancer, that is, declare the limitations himself, intending them to be final, the hands of the Court are bound, and the words must be taken in their natural sense (c). Thus where a testator devised to A. for life without impeachment of waste, remainder to trustees to preserve contingent remainders, remainder to the heirs of the body of A., remainders over, and then directed the residue of his personal estate to be laid out in the purchase of lands, and declared that the lands when purchased "should remain and continue to, for, and upon such and the like estate or estates, uses, trusts, intents, and purposes, and under and subject to the like charges, restrictions, and limitations, as were by him before limited and declared of and concerning his lands and premises thereinbefore devised, or as near thereto as might be, and the deaths of parties would admit," Lord Northington said that the testator had referred no settlement to his trustees to complete, but had declared his own uses and trusts, which being declared, there was no instance where the Court had proceeded so far as to alter or change them (a). However, the decision to which his Lordship came seems not to have met with the entire approbation of Lord Eldon (b).

Executory trusts of chattels in wills.

22. In the cases relating to executory trusts of chattels in wills, the bequest, instead of being direct, has generally been by way of reference to a previous strict settlement of realty.

The law upon this subject was for a long time in a very unsatisfactory state, but the result of the cases (c) at the present day appears to be that where a testator devises land in strict settlement, and then bequeaths heir-looms to be held by or in trust for the parties entitled under the limitations of the real estate, or without making any bequest, directs or expresses a desire that the heir-looms shall be held upon the like trusts, even though the testator should add the words "as far as the rules of law and equity will permit," the use of the heir-looms will belong to the tenant for life of the real estate for his life, and the property of the heir-looms will vest absolutely in the first tenant in tail immediately on his birth, though he afterwards die an infant. The Court, in these cases, either regards the trusts as executed, and not of a directory character, or if the trusts be executory, the Court considers it has no authority in making a settlement to insert a limitation over on the tenant in tail dying under 21. However, there is no unlawfulness in such a limitation, so that if a bequest of heir-looms in a will be clearly executory, and the testator manifests a distinct intention that a settlement shall be made of the heir-looms, and that such clauses shall be inserted as will render them inalienable for as long a period as the law will permit, the Court would no doubt execute the intention by settling the heir-looms, and inserting a limitation, by which the absolute interest in the first tenant in tail should by his death under 21, or by his death under 21 without issue, be carried over to the person next entitled in remainder (d). But if heir-looms be assigned or bequeathed to trustees, not upon trust simply for the persons entitled under the limitations of the real estates, which, notwithstanding the words "so far as the rules of law and equity will permit," would vest them absolutely in the first tenant in tail who came into being, but upon trust, "as far as the rules of law and equity will permit," for the persons successively entitled to the actual freehold (in the sense of the freehold in possession), with a proviso that no child of a person made tenant for life shall take absolutely unless he attained 21, here, though the trust be executed and not executory, the absolute vesting is coupled with the possession, and is therefore suspended until the death of the tenant for life, and will then vest in the child who, after his death, shall first fulfil the requisite of being tenant in tail in possession and attaining the age of 21 years (a).

In one case a testator gave certain jewels to his nephew John, "to be held as heir-looms by him, and by his eldest son on his decease, and to descend to the eldest son of such eldest son, and so on to the eldest son of his descendants, as far as the rules of law and equity would permit." John died in 1866, leaving an eldest son, the plaintiff (born in testator's lifetime), and the Court [held that a valid executory trust was created and] declared that the jewels were in trust for John for life, and on his death for plaintiff for his life, and on his death for his eldest son, to be vested at 21, and if he died in the life-time of plaintiff, or after his death but under 21, leaving an eldest son born before the death of plaintiff, then in trust for such eldest son, to be vested at 21 (b), with an ultimate trust in favour of John (c).

Where freeholds and chattels real were devised to trustees in trust for the testator's son for life, with a direction that, if he married, the trustees should settle and secure the premises as a jointure to the wife for her life, and to the issue share and share alike; and the son died, having married twice, but having had issue by the first wife, viz. three daughters, the Court directed a settlement of the whole on the second wife for life by way of jointure, with remainder to the three daughters as to the freeholds as tenants in common in tail, with cross remainders between them, and as to the chattels real, as tenants in common absolutely (d). [And where a testator directed that the shares of his daughters in his personal estate, in case of their respective marriages, should be assigned to trustees for the benefit of the daughter or daughters so marrying for life, and after her or their deceases for the use of her or their intended husband or husbands for his or their life or lives, and after their decease respectively for the children of such marriage or respective marriages, with a gift over in the event of a daughter dying "without leaving any issue her surviving," it was held that, as the gift over showed an intention on the part of the testator to include children of a future marriage, so the executory trust authorized a settlement of a daughter's share on her for life with remainder to any husband, and that a second husband was accordingly entitled to a life interest (a).

Where freeholds were settled by will in strict settlement with a shifting clause in certain events, and the testator gave leaseholds to trustees "upon and for such trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisoes and directions as, regard being had to the difference in the tenure of the premises respectively, would best and most nearly correspond with the uses, trusts, powers, provisoes, and directions in the will declared and contained concerning the freeholds," it was held that the trust as to the leaseholds was executory, and that assuming the shifting clause, if applied verbatim to the leaseholds, to be bad for remoteness, it ought to be so modified as to render it free from that objection (b).]

Trust to correspond with limitations of peerage.

In another case (c) a testatrix devised real and personal estate to trustees in trust to A. for life, with remainders over in tail. A peerage was afterwards granted to A. for life with remainder to B., her second son, in tail male; and then the testatrix, by a codicil directed the trustees to settle the real and personal estate "in a course of entail to correspond as nearly as might be with the limitations of the barony, in such manner and form and with such powers as the trustees should consider proper or their counsel should advise," and it was held that the object of making provision for the holders of a peerage, and the object of making provision for the children of a marriage, appeared so analogous, that it was the duty of the Court, in the former as well as the latter case, to prevent, as far as possible, the defeat of the object; and accordingly the real estate was directed to be settled on A.'s second son for life, without impeachment of waste, with remainders to his first and other sons in tail male, &c., with power to the tenant for life of jointuring and charging portions; and the personal estate was directed to be settled so as to go along with the real estate in the nature of heir-looms, so far as the rules of law and equity would allow, but so as not to vest in any tenant in tail by purchase who died under 21 without leaving issue inheritable under the entail.

[A bequest of chattels to a peer and his successors, or to a peer and his successors "to be enjoyed with and to go with the title," is not sufficient to create an executory trust, or any binding obligation affecting the legatee (a). So under a bequest of chattels to trustees "upon trust to permit and suffer the property to go, and be held and enjoyed with the title and honours of Exmouth, so far as the rules of law and equity will admit, by the person for the time being actually possessed of the title in the nature of heir-looms," the first person who succeeds to the honours takes the chattels absolutely (b). But in Montagu v. Lord Inchiquin (c), where there was a gift of family diamonds to Lucius Baron Inchiquin, and the testatrix added "and I direct the said diamonds to be delivered to Lord Inchiquin free of duty and I make the above bequest to Lord Inchiquin as head of the existing family, and so far as I lawfully can, I direct that the said diamonds shall be deemed heir-looms in the family of Inchiquin, and shall be held and enjoyed by the person for the time being bearing the title of Baron Inchiquin," V. C. Hall held that the clause was not executory, that the gift did not lapse by the death of Lucius Baron Inchiquin in the lifetime of the testatrix, but took effect in favour of the person who should be baron at the death of the testatrix, and that a disposition of chattels to follow a dignity is good where there is no rule against perpetuities transgressed. But a gift to trustees of the contents of a house "upon trust to select and set aside a collection of the best paintings, &c., for the Earl of E. and his successors to be held and settled as heir-looms and to go with the title," is clearly executory and confers life interests only on persons in esse at the death of the testator (d).]

Whether joint-tenancy in executory trusts in wills to be construed as tenancy in common.

23. Again in wills, if the words taken in their usual sense would create a joint-tenancy, the Court has no authority, as it has in articles, to execute the trust by giving a tenancy in common; but, where the testator has shown a desire of providing for his children (a), or putting himself in loco parentis for his grandchildren (b), the Court has adopted the same construction as in articles: however, in the cases which have occurred, there has always been some accompanying circumstance to denote a tenancy in common, as the estate really intended.

Settlement on a feme "strictly."

24. If personalty be directed by a will to be settled on a female "strictly," it will be settled upon her (if married) for her sole and separate use without power of anticipation, with a limitation to her absolutely, if she survive her husband, and should she predecease him, then for such intents and purposes as she may by will appoint, and in default of appointment for her next of kin (c).

If a testator bequeath a fund in trust for a feme, and direct that, in case of her marriage, it shall be so settled that she may enjoy the same for her life, the Court will settle it with a clause against anticipation (d).

[If personal estate be bequeathed for the benefit of a feme sole "to be paid upon her marriage and to be settled upon her by her settlement," the Court will upon her marriage settle it on the usual trusts for her and her children (e). And when a legacy is directed to be settled upon a married woman for her life and at her death to be divided equally among her children, a clause in restraint of anticipation of her life interest will be introduced, and the trust for the children will be for such as being sons attain 21, or being daughters attain that age or marry, but without any power of appointment among the children being reserved to the mother (f).]

Post-nuptial settlements.

25. Executory trusts in post-nuptial settlements, whether voluntary or founded on a valuable consideration, will be construed in the same manner as executory trusts in wills (g).

Of powers in executory trusts.

Powers not inserted without a direction.

If the testator or contracting parties give no directions as to the insertion of powers, the Court cannot, upon the ground of implied intention, order a power to be introduced (a), except possibly a power of leasing, which differs from all other powers in being an almost necessary adjunct for the preservation of the estate itself (b). If the authority be expressed in general terms, as "to insert all usual powers," the trustees may then introduce powers of leasing for 21 years (c), of sale and exchange (d), of maintenance and advancement (e), of varying securities (f), and of appointment of new trustees (g); and, it seems, where the property is joint, or contains mines, or is fit for building, they may also insert powers of partition, of leasing mines, and of granting building leases (h). "But there is a palpable distinction," said Sir Launcelot Shadwell, "between powers for the management and better enjoyment of the settled estate, as powers of leasing, of sale and exchange, &c., which are beneficial to all parties, and powers which confer personal privileges on particular parties, such as powers to jointure, to charge portions, to raise money for any particular purpose, &c." (i). The latter, therefore, may not be introduced under a direction to insert usual powers, for they have the effect of diminishing the corpus of the settled estate, and the Court has no rule by which to determine the quantum of the charge (j). But where an estate was directed to be settled so as to go along with a peerage, and the trustees were

In a recent case, however, where a will had simply directed a settlement without authorizing any powers expressly, the M. R. held a tacit intention to be implied that powers of leasing, sale and exchange, and appointment of new trustees, and of signing receipts, with provisions for maintenance, education, and advancement, should be inserted, Turner v. Sargent, 17 Beav. 515. [And in a subsequent case, Fry, J., approved of and followed the decision in Turner v. Sargent, and said that the case of Wheate v. Hall did not appear to him to conflict with that view, that there the direction was that the trustees should secure the property in a particular manner, which was so fully detailed in the will that the Court thought it could not, although the trusts were in terms executory, insert a power of sale. Wise v. Piper, 13 Ch. to insert all such powers as they should "consider proper or their counsel should advise," it was ruled that powers of jointuring and charging portions were for the honour of the whole settlement, and not a favour to the first tenant for life only, in contradistinction to his successors, and therefore ought to be inserted (a). If the will or articles direct the insertion of some particular powers by name, then, as expressio unius exclusio alterius, the meaning of the words "usual powers" will be materially qualified. Thus, where it was stipulated that the settlement should contain a power of leasing for 21 years in possession, a power of sale and exchange, of appointment of new trustees, and other usual powers, it was held that a power of granting building leases could not be inserted (b). So, if the trustees be authorized to insert a power of sale and exchange of estates in the county of Hereford, and all other usual powers, they would not be justified in extending the power of sale and exchange to estates lying in a different county (c). And where a testator directed that the settlement should contain all proper powers for making leases, and otherwise according to circumstances, and that provision should also be made for the appointment of new trustees, and the Court was asked to insert a power of sale and exchange, Lord Eldon said, "It was held by Sir W. Grant, that unless the insertion of a power were authorized by the direction to make a settlement, it could not be introduced; and if where nothing is expressed, nothing can be implied, it is impossible where something is expressed, I can imply more than is expressed; and particularly where the will notices what powers are to be given" (d). But, where a testator directed the insertion of powers of leasing, and sale or exchange or partition, and then added, "And my will is, that in such intended settlement shall be inserted all such other proper and reasonable powers as are usually inserted in settlements of the like nature," and the question was raised, whether, under these words, a power of appointment of new trustees might be introduced, Lord Cottenham, then M. R., said, "He had referred to the will, and as he found that those general words were in a separate and distinct sentence, he was of opinion that they would authorize the insertion of the power" (e).

"Proper powers." A testator had directed the insertion of proper powers for making leases or otherwise to be reserved to the tenants for life, while qualified to exercise them, and, whenever disqualified, to the trustees. In the execution of the settlement, a power of sale and exchange was introduced, and was limited to the trustees with the consent of the tenant for life; but it was held by Lord Eldon, that the insertion of the power in that mode was not in conformity with the instructions (a). It was afterwards debated, before Sir T. Plumer, whether a power of sale and exchange could, in any form, be admitted, when his Honour said, that "The first point to be considered was, in whom the powers were to be vested; and it was clear that they were to be given to the tenants for life, if qualified, but if they should not be able to act, to the trustees. Now, if the power of sale and exchange was to be given to the tenant for life without check or control, he could not say that it was a proper power; on the contrary, it might be very dangerous, as the tenant for life might for many reasons be induced to sell, when it might not be for the benefit of the remaindermen; nor was it usual to give him this power without the check of requiring the assent of the trustees. Take it the other way: if the tenant for life was disqualified, as by infancy, could the Court say it was a proper power to be given exclusively to the trustees?" And therefore his Honour thought the power of sale and exchange could not be introduced (b).

[27. Now by the Settled Land Act, 1882 (c), the tenant for life (d), under the settlement is empowered to sell, exchange, enfranchise and concur in partitioning the settled land, (e) and to grant building, mining and other leases; and by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (f), the trustees of settlements made after the 31st Dec. 1881, are empowered (subject to any contrary intention expressed in the settlement), during the minority of any person beneficially entitled to the possession of the settled land, to manage the property and apply any income for the maintenance, education or benefit of the infant; and consequently powers for these purposes are not now usually inserted in settlements, and it is conceived that the Court would [Settled Land Act.]

not insert any of them in a settlement under a direction to insert "usual" or "proper" powers; but would in the absence of special directions allow the statutory powers to take effect without variation.

It may further be observed that by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (a), "it is declared that the powers given by the Act to any person, and the covenants, provisions, stipulations and words which under the Act are to be deemed included or implied in any instrument, shall be deemed proper powers, covenants, provisions, stipulations and words to be given by or to be contained in any such instrument," and all persons in a fiduciary position and their solicitor are exempted from any obligation to exclude the operation of the Act where such exclusion is possible.]

Powers of sale. 29. If a settlement of stock with a power of varying securities contain a covenant to settle real estate upon the like trusts, and with the like powers, a power of sale and exchange is implied, as corresponding to the power of varying securities (b).

Multiplication of charges. 30. Trusts are often created by words of reference to other trusts, and where this is the case, there should be a proviso, where such is the intention, that charges on the estate shall not be increased or multiplied. Should the clause, however, be omitted, the Court will exercise its judgment on the question whether the duplication of charges was or not intended by the parties; and as a general rule a referential trust ought not to be so read as to create a duplication (c).

2. A frequent case of implied trust arises where a testator employs words precatory, or recommendatory, or expressing a belief (a). Thus if he "desire" (b), "will" (c), "request" (d), "will and desire" (e), "will and declare" (f), "wish and request" (g), "wish and desire" (h), "entreat" (i), "most heartily beseech" (j), "order and direct" (k), "authorize and empower" (l), "recommend" (m), "beg" (n), "hope" (o), "do not doubt" (p), "be well assured" (q), "confide" (r), "have the fullest confidence" (s), "trust" (t), "trust and confide" (u), "have full assurance and confident hope" (a), be "under the firm conviction" (b), "in the full belief" (c), "well know" (d), or use such expressions as "of course the legatee will give" (e), "in consideration the legatee has promised to give" (f), ["to be applied as I have requested him to do" (g),] &c.; in these and similar cases, the intention of the testator is considered imperative, and the devisee or legatee is bound, and may be compelled to give effect to the injunction (h). And though instances of this kind generally occur upon the construction of wills, the doctrine does not apply to wills exclusively, but has been extended also to settlements inter vivos (i).

No trust raised where there is uncertainty.

3. But precatory words will be held to express a wish only, and not a command, if it be impracticable for the Court to deal with it as a trust; as if a testator devise a house to his wife and express a wish that his sister should live with her, for here no interest in the house is given to the sister, and how can the Court compel the widow and sister to live together (j)? and the like construction will prevail where either the objects intended to be benefited are imperfectly described (k), or the amount of the property to which the trust should attach is not sufficiently defined (l); for the difficulty that would attend the execution of such imperfect trusts is converted by the Court into an argument that no trust was really intended (a). The rule as laid down by Lord Alvanley, and since recognised as the correct principle, is, that a trust is created in those cases only "where a testator points out the objects, the property, and the way in which it shall go" (b).

Secus, where the uncertainty arises from want of evidence.

4. But although uncertainty in the object will unquestionably furnish a reason for holding no trust to have been intended by precatory words, it will be otherwise where the uncertainty arises from the circumstance that the Court has not before it for its guidance the whole intention of the testator in reference to the object: and in such a case the Court will make a declaration that the devisee or legatee is a trustee for objects unascertainable, and (unless the trust was by way of charge upon the estate of the devisee or legatee) will decree a resulting trust for the benefit of the heir-at-law or next of kin, according to the nature of the property (c).

Uncertainty of the objects.

"Family."

5. The objects have been held to be uncertain where personal estate was given to A., with a hope "that he would continue it in the family" (d); but, as regards personal estate, the word family has been sometimes construed as equivalent to relations, that is next of kin (e); and where freeholds were so devised, it was held that by "family" was to be understood the worthiest member of it, viz., the heir-at-law (f). But the designation was held to be too uncertain as to freeholds, where the request was to distribute "amongst such members of the person's family" as he should think most deserving (a).

"Heirs." In another case both real and personal estate were blended together, and given to A., in full confidence that she would devise the whole of the estate to "such of the heirs of the testator's father as she might think best deserved a preference," and the Court could not determine whether heirs were intended, or next of kin, or both (b).

"Relations." Again, a residuary estate was bequeathed to A., with a recommendation that she would "consider the testator's relations." Sir A. Hart asked, Who were the objects of the trust? Did the testator mean relations at his own death, or at A.'s death? Did he mean that she should have the liberty of executing the trust the day after his death? And his Honour was of opinion that no trust could attach (c). But there can be no uncertainty of the objects where such a trust is to be executed by will, for then those who answer the description at the death of the donee of the power must be the parties contemplated (d).

Uncertainty of the subject matter. 6. The Court has refused to establish the trust from the uncertainty of the subject (that is, of the property claimed to be bound by the trust), where the recommendation was to "consider certain persons" (e), "to be kind to them" (f), "to remember them" (g), "to do justice to them" (h), "to make ample provision for them" (i), ["to take care of his nephew as might seem best in the future" (j),] "to use the property for herself and her children, and to remember the Church of God and the poor" (k) "to give what should remain at his death, or what he should die seised or possessed of" (l), "to finally appropriate as he pleased," with a recommendation to divide amongst certain persons (a), to divide and dispose of the savings (b), or the bulk of the property (c), or where the donee of the property had power to dispose of any part he pleased, whether expressly given him, or arising from implication, or from the nature of the subject (d). [So, where the testator gave all his property to his wife and expressed his "wish that whatever property his wife might possess at her death should be equally divided between his children," the wife was held to be absolutely entitled (e).] But where the recommendation was that the legatee, in case she married again, should settle what she possessed under the testator's will to her separate use, and should bequeath what she should die possessed of under the will in favour of certain, persons, it was held that the whole personal estate was overreached by the trust (f).

Whether trust or power, is a question of intention, not of grammatical import.

7. Where both objects and property are certain, yet no trust will arise, if the testator expressly declare that the language is not to be deemed imperative, or the construing it a trust would be a contradiction to the terms in which the preceding bequest is given (g); or if, all circumstances considered, it is more probable that the testator meant to communicate a mere discretion (h); or if a testator give an estate to a feme covert to be her sole and separate property, "with power to appoint to her husband or children" (i); or the testator at the same time declare that the estate shall be "unfettered and unlimited," (j); or, "in the legatee's entire power" (k); or be "left to his entire judgment"

The construction of the words we are considering never turns on their grammatical import: they may be imperative, but are not necessarily so (k). In Shaw v. Lawless (l), the trustees were recommended to employ a receiver, and Lord Cottenham, alluding to that case, observed, "It was there laid down as a rule which I have since acted upon, that though 'recommendation' may in some cases amount to a direction and create a trust, yet, that being a flexible term, if such a construction of it be inconsistent with any positive provision in the will, it is to be considered as a recommendation and nothing more. that as the two provisions could not stand together, the flexible term was to give way to the inflexible term" (a).

Trustees of this kind not always so strictly bound as in a common trust.

8. If a trust be created, it does not follow that it shall be equally restrictive, as in the case of a clear ordinary trust. Thus, an estate was devised to A. and her heirs, "in the fullest confidence" that after her decease she would devise the property to the family of the testator; and Lord Eldon asked, if there were any case in which the doctrine had been carried so far, that the tenant in fee was not at liberty, with respect to timber and mines, to treat the estate in the same husbandlike manner as another tenant in fee? and his Lordship said he should hesitate a long time before he held that the person bound by the trust was not entitled to cut timber in the ordinary management of the property (b). And so it was afterwards decided by the House of Lords on appeal (c).

Case of trustee taking no beneficial interest.

9. On the other hand, the settlement may be so specially worded that the person bound by the trust takes for life only, with remainder to the children (d), or is not even tenant for life and takes no beneficial interest at all. Thus, where a testator devised to his wife in fee, "under the firm conviction that she would dispose of and manage the same for the benefit of her children," the widow claimed to be tenant for life, but the Court held that she was merely a trustee (e).

Where the words raise a partial trust, the surplus does not result.

10. Where the words are construed in equity to raise a partial trust, the devisee or legatee is treated as beneficial owner, subject to the charge, and the surplus will not result to the heir or next of kin, but will belong to the devisee or legatee (f).

Implied trusts now rather discouraged.

11. The current of decisions has of late years set against the doctrine of converting the devisee or legatee into a trustee; [and the Court now refuses to extend the doctrine, or to regard the mere use of particular words (g), and will not imply a trust, unless it appears from the will that such was the intention of the testator (h).]

Directions as to maintenance.

12. Under the head of trusts which we are now considering, may be classed the cases where property is given to a parent or other person standing or regarded loco parentis, with a direction touching the maintenance of the children. The first question is, Did the settlor intend to impose a trust, or do the words express only the motive of the gift? Instances where no trust is created are, where the bequest is to a person "to enable him to maintain the children" (a), or an absolute bequest is made, and afterwards the motive is assigned, as "that he may support himself and his children" (b), or "for the maintenance of himself and his family" (c), [or "towards the support and maintenance of her two children until they shall attain the age of twenty-one years" (d);] or "to A. for her own use and benefit absolutely, having full confidence in her sufficient and judicious provision for her children (e), or, "being well assured that she will husband the means left to her for the sake of herself and her children" (f), or "to be applied by her in the bringing up and maintenance of her children" (g). Instances of the creation of a trust are where property is given, "that he may dispose thereof for the benefit of himself and his children" (h), or "at her sole and entire disposal for the maintenance of herself and her children" (i), or "for his own use and benefit, and the maintenance and education of his children" (j), [or "for their own use and support of their children" (k)], or "at the disposal of the legatee for herself and her children" (l), or "all overplus towards her support and her family" (m), or to A. "for the education and advancing in life of her children" (n), [or to A. "and the said tenement I leave to the disposal of her, with a view that the said tenement may be disposed of as she may think proper for the maintenance and education of my two daughters" (a).] In a modern case (b), it was held that the circumstance of a trustee being interposed, instead of the property being given directly to the parent, was sufficient to show that no sub-trust was intended, but this view appears not to be supported by earlier decisions (c).

Nature of such a trust.

13. Where a trust is created, the person bound by it is the hand to administer it, and can sign a valid receipt for the fund, the subject of the trust (d). And the person bound by the trust is regarded in the same light as a committee of a lunatic, or guardian of an infant (e), that is, he has a duty imposed upon him; but so long as he discharges that duty, he is entitled to the surplus for his own benefit, and the Court requires from him no account retrospectively of the application of the fund (f), and allows him prospectively to propose any reasonable arrangement how the object of the trust may be accomplished (g), or will order payment to him on his undertaking to maintain the children properly, with liberty to the children to apply (h). Should the person bound by the trust become by misconduct unfit to maintain and educate the children, the Court will not allow him to receive the fund (i); and should the fiduciary assign his interest, the Court will inquire what part is needed for the maintenance and education of the children, and will give the surplus only to the assignee (j).

Forisfamiliation.

14. It follows from these principles that if there be no children born (k), or if they have since died (l), the person bound by the trust takes the whole produce for his own benefit. So the children lose their claim if they become forisfamiliated, i.e., cease to be members of or to belong to the establishment contemplated by the testator, as if a child marry (a), or under other circumstances maintain a separate establishment (b), for it can scarcely be supposed that the testator meant an income given with reference to one establishment, to be split into as many different incomes as there are children (c). But it has been said that if a daughter marry, and afterwards becomes a widow and has no support, the right to maintenance may revive (d).

Attaining 21.

15. Whether a child's right to maintenance will cease ipso facto by his or her attaining the age of twenty-one years, must depend, of course, upon the particular words used (e), but is open generally to some uncertainty (f). It can hardly be maintained, on the one hand, that when a child has attained majority, and is fairly launched into the world, and is making a livelihood, the trust is to continue (g); and, on the other hand, if a child be willing to remain at home, and no reasonable objection can be made to it, the person bound by the trust cannot refuse maintenance on the mere ground that the child has attained twenty-one (h). [But an annuity given to children for their "maintenance and education" is not confined to their minorities, but endures during their lives (i).]

Case of tenant for life bound by such a trust with remainder over.

16. If a person be entitled for life for the maintenance of herself, and the maintenance and education of the testator's children, and after her death the trust is for the children absolutely, a child on coming of age cannot, even with the concurrence of the tenant for life, call for a transfer of a proportionate share of the property, if this diminution of the fund would endanger the right of the other children to be properly maintained and educated during the tenancy for life. The Court in such a case has adopted the expedient that a part of the child's share should be paid out on his undertaking to account for the income of it, and on the footing that the residue of the share should be retained as a security for the due payment of the income (a). Where there was a clear trust for the maintenance of the children, the Court reserved the consideration of what would be the rights of the parties after the parent's death, and gave liberty to apply on that event (b).

Charge of debts, &c., in a will.

17. To proceed with the instances of implied trusts, if a person by will direct his realty to be sold, or charge it with debts and legacies (c), or with any particular legacy (d), the legal estate may descend to the heir, or it may pass to a devisee; but the Court will view the direction as an implied declaration of trust, and will enforce the execution of it against the legal proprietor.

Conditions construed as trusts.

18. So, in many cases, if a person devise an estate with words of condition annexed, the conditional words are not construed to impose a legal forfeiture on breach so as to give a right of entry, but are viewed as trusts affecting the conscience of the owner, and so enforceable in a Court of Equity; as if a house be devised to A. for life, "he keeping the same in repair," or if an estate be given to A. in fee, "he paying the testator's debts within twelve months from the testator's death" (e).

Agreement for valuable consideration.

19. Again, if a person agree for valuable consideration to settle a specific estate, he thereby becomes a trustee of it for the intended objects, and all the consequences of a trust will follow (f); and so if he covenant to charge all lands that he may possess at a particular time (g), or at any time (h), he will be a trustee of such lands to the extent of the charge. on his marriage to settle all the personal estate that he may acquire during the coverture, the trusts upon which it is so agreed the personalty shall be settled will fasten upon the property as it falls into possession; and if the money has been laid out in a purchase, it may be followed into the land (a). But if a person covenant to settle such property as he shall die seised of, he may dispose of his property as he pleases in his lifetime, and the covenant will affect only such property as he may leave after payment of his just debts (b); and if a person covenant to secure an annuity, either by a charge on freeholds, or by investment in the funds, or by the best means in his power, it will not create a charge on the covenantor's property generally (c). [Where a covenant for settlement comprises the covenantor's whole future property, it may be doubtful whether such covenant can be enforced in equity (d), but if it contains specific words the Court will, if necessary, construe it divisibly, and enforce it as to classes of property falling within the specific words (e).]

Contract for sale.

20. Again, if a person contract to sell another an estate, the vendor has impliedly declared himself a trustee in fee for the purchaser, and is accountable to him for the rents and profits (f); and if the tenants have been allowed improperly to run in arrear (g), or there has been unhusbandlike farming (h), or any other injury done, either by the wilful waste or neglect of the vendor (i), he is answerable to the purchaser as for a breach of trust. the purchaser; and if the accident by which the damage arises brings with it legal obligations which must be immediately answered, and which the vendor satisfies, the expense thus incurred must be borne by the purchaser (a). But where pending the completion of a purchase of copyholds the trustee for sale died, and a new admittance became necessary, it was held that the expense of the fine must be borne by the trust estate (b). Should the estate become by any accident more valuable, the purchaser then will take the improvement (c). It should be observed, however, that the vendor is, after all, a trustee sub modo only, for he cannot be compelled to deliver up the possession until the purchase money has been paid (d). And so the purchaser is only a cestui que trust sub modo, and he cannot enforce any equitable rights attached to the estate until the contract has been completed (e).

21. It would be endless to pursue implied trusts through all their ramifications; a subject so extensive that years might be passed in the study of equitable jurisprudence, without exhausting so ample a field; but the leading general principles by which the Courts are guided may be gathered sufficiently for our purpose from the few examples given.

CHAPTER IX.

OF RESULTING TRUSTS.

Classification of trusts by operation of law.

HAVING discussed the various questions involved in the creation of trusts by the act of a party, we shall next direct our attention to the creation of trusts by operation of law. Trusts of this kind may be regarded as twofold, viz. 1. Resulting. 2. Constructive.

Subdivision of resulting trusts.

Resulting Trusts, the subject of the present chapter, may be subdivided into the two following classes: First, where an owner or person legally and equitably entitled makes a conveyance, devise, or bequest of the legal estate, and there is no ground for the inference that he meant to dispose of the equitable; and, Secondly, Where a purchaser of property takes a conveyance of the legal estate in the name of a third person, but there is nothing to indicate an intention of not appropriating to himself the beneficial interest.

SECTION I.

OF RESULTING TRUSTS WHERE THERE IS A DISPOSITION OF THE LEGAL AND NOT OF THE EQUITABLE INTEREST.

General rule.

1. THE general rule is, that wherever, upon a conveyance, devise, or bequest, it appears that the grantee, devisee, or legatee was intended to take the legal estate merely, the equitable interest, or so much of it as is left undisposed of, will result, if arising out of the settlor's realty, to himself, or his heir, and, if out of personal estate, to himself or his executor.

Chattel interest in real estate results to heir's personal representatives.

2. Should the interest resulting, as a remnant of the real estate, to the heir be of a chattel nature, as a term of years, or a sum of money, it will on the death of the heir, devolve on his personal representative (a).

(a) Levet v. Needham, 2 Vern. 138; Wych v. Packington, 3 B. P. C. 44; Sewell v. Denny, 10 Beav. 315; Barrett v. Buck, 12 Jur. 771. See Halford v. Stains, 16 Sim. 448.

3. The settlor's intention of excluding the person invested with the legal estate from the usufructuary enjoyment, may either be presumed by the Court or be actually expressed upon the instrument. Of trusts resulting by presumption.

4. If an estate be granted either without consideration or for merely a nominal one (a), and no trust is declared of any part, then if the conveyance be simply to a stranger and no intention appear of conferring the beneficial interest, as the law will not suppose a person to part with property without some inducement thereto, a trust of the whole estate (as in the analogous case of uses before the statute of Henry VIII.) will result to the settlor (b). And if two joint tenants make such a conveyance without consideration, the equitable interest will result to them in joint tenancy (c). Whether trust will result where no trust declared of any part.

5. If the conveyance be to a wife (d) or child (e) it will be presumed an advancement, and the wife or child will be entitled beneficially. Case of wife or child.

6. In a case where a son conveyed an estate to his father, as purchaser on the face of the deed, for the sum of £400, and then filed a bill against the devisees of the father for a re-conveyance, on the ground that the son never intended to part with the beneficial interest, but meant only to facilitate the raising of a sum upon mortgage by means of this machinery, Sir J. Leach held, that since the Statute of Frauds parol evidence was inadmissible to prove a trust for the son, and that as there was no fraud or misapprehension, but the meaning was that the father should exercise towards the world at large the beneficial ownership, there was no resulting or constructive trust, and that the devisees must keep the estate. But the Court decreed the son as the ostensible vendor to have a lien upon the property for the £400, as for unpaid purchase money (a). However, in a similar case of absolute sale upon the face of the deed, but where the grantee afterwards admitted himself in writing to be a trustee, Lord Kenyon held that, as the written evidence established facts inconsistent with the deed, further evidence by parol was admissible to prove the truth of the transaction (b).

Ch. 182; Davies v. Otty (No. 2), 35 Beav. 208. But in Lloyd v. Spillet, 2 Atk. 150, and Young v. Peachey, ib. 257, Lord Hardwicke was apparently of opinion that, since the Statute of Frauds, there are only two cases of resulting trust, viz.: 1st, Where an estate is purchased in the name of a stranger; and 2ndly, Where on a voluntary conveyance a trust is declared of part, in which case the residue results. It would seem to follow that, in his opinion, should a voluntary conveyance be made and no trust at all be expressed, the grantee would take the beneficial interest to his own use; and see Hutchins v. Lee, 1 Atk. 447.

Mistake or fraud.

7. Of course the Court will not permit the grantee to retain the beneficial interest if there was any mistake on the part of the grantor (c), or any mala fides on the part of the grantee (d). But if the grantor himself intended a fraud upon the law, the assurance, if the defendant set up the defence, will remain absolute against the grantor (e); but if the defendant admit the trust, it seems the Court will relieve (f).

Addition to a trust fund.

8. If a person invest a sum in the names of the trustees of his marriage settlement, no trust will result, the presumption being that he meant it to be held upon the trusts of the settlement (g); and Sir J. Bacon once observed generally, that in marriage settlements the resulting trust was not in favour of the settlor (h), meaning it is conceived that the presumption of making provision for the persons marrying and their issue, was strong enough in certain cases to prevail against the general rule. [But where by a marriage settlement the intended wife's father settled property upon trust for the intended husband for life, and then for the intended wife for life, and then for the children of the marriage, but the trusts for the children were void for remoteness, Kay, J., held that there was a resulting trust for the settlor (i).]

Transfer of chattels.

9. It was said in one case that if a man transfer stock or deliver money to another, it must proceed from an intention to benefit that other person, and therefore, although he be a stranger, it shall be primâ facie a gift (a); but if such an intention cannot be inferred consistently with the attendant circumstances, a trust will result (b). And even where there is a gift of stock by transfer into the joint names of the settlor and a stranger, still in this, as in other similar cases, the settlor retains the beneficial interest for his life (c).

Where a trust is declared of part of the estate, the trust of the residue results.

10. If upon a conveyance (d), devise (e), or bequest (f), a trust be declared of part of the estate, and nothing is said as to the residue, then, clearly, the creation of the partial trust is regarded as the sole object in view, and the equitable interest undisposed of by the settlor will result to him or his representative. [But the question whether or not the trust is partial is necessarily one of construction, and where by a creditors' deed the business and property of a firm were assigned to trustees upon trust to carry on the business, or sell and dispose of the assets, and pay and divide the clear residue of the profits and moneys among the creditors in rateable proportion, according to the amounts of the debts, it was held by the House of Lords (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal (g)) that by the form of the deed there was no resulting trust of any possible surplus in favour of the assignors.]

Partial declaration of trust distinguished from a charge.

11. But upon this subject a distinction must be observed between a devise to a person for a particular purpose with no intention of conferring the beneficial interest, and a devise with the view of conferring the beneficial interest, but subject to a particular injunction. Thus, if lands be devised to A. and his heirs upon trust to pay debts, this is simply the creation of a trust, and the residue will result to the heir; but if the devise be to A. and his heirs charged with debts, the intention of the testator is to devise beneficially subject to the charge, and then whatever remains, after the charge has been satisfied, will belong to the devisee (a).

No positive rule to be laid down.

12. No positive rule can be laid down in what cases the devise will carry with it a beneficial character, and in what it will be construed a trust; but on all occasions the Court, refusing to be governed by mere technical phraseology, extracts the probable intention of the settlor from the general scope of the instrument (b).

Relationship of the devisee or legatee.

13. The recognition of the relationship of the parties has often materially influenced the Court against the construction of a mere trust (c); as, where a testator gave 5*l.* to his brother, who was his heir-at-law, and "made and constituted his dearly beloved wife his sole heiress and executrix to sell and dispose thereof at her pleasure, and to pay his debts and legacies;" and Lord King decreed the devisee to be beneficially entitled (d). But any allusion of this kind is merely one circumstance of evidence, and therefore to be counteracted by the language of the other parts of the instrument (e).

Heir of settlor not to be excluded from the resulting trust on mere conjecture.

14. It must also be observed, that the heir will not be excluded from the resulting trust on bare conjecture (f); and there must be positive evidence of a benefit intended to the devisee, and not merely negative evidence that no benefit was intended to the heir; for the trust results to the real representative, not on the ground of intention, but because the ancestor has declared no intention (g). Thus, a legacy to the heir, will not prevent a trust from resulting (h); but, joined to other circumstances in favour of the devisee, it will not be without its effect (i).

Parol evidence.

15. As the species of trust we are now considering results by presumption of law, it may be rebutted as to instruments inter vivos by positive evidence by parol, that the settlor's intention was to confer the surplus interest beneficially (a). And it seems that in one case parol evidence was read as to the intention of a testator, but the decision of the case turned more particularly upon the intention, as collected from the will itself (b).

Of trusts resulting from intention expressed.

16. Next, a trust results, by operation of law, where the intention not to benefit the grantee, devisee, or legatee, is expressed upon the instrument itself, as if the conveyance, devise, or bequest, be to a person "upon trust," and no trust declared (c), or the bequest be to a person named as executor "to enable him to carry into effect the trusts of the will," and no trust is declared (d), or the grant, devise, or bequest be upon certain trusts that are too vague to be executed (e), or upon trusts to be thereafter declared, and no declaration is ever made (f), or upon trusts that are void for unlawfulness (g),

[or uncertainty (a),] or that fail by lapse (b) &c.; for in these and the like cases the trustee can have no pretence for claiming the beneficial ownership, when, by the express language of the instrument, the whole property has been impressed with a trust.

"Trust" and "trustee," do not necessarily exclude a beneficial gift.

17. Although the introduction of the words "upon trust" may be strong evidence of the intention not to confer on the devisee a beneficial interest (c), yet that construction may be negatived by the context, or the general scope of the instrument (d); and in like manner the devisee may be designated as "trustee," but the expression may be explained away; as, for instance, if the term be used with reference to one only of two funds, the devisee may still establish his title to the beneficial interest in the other (e). On the other hand there may be a total absence of the word "trust" or "trustee" throughout the whole will, and yet the Court may collect an intention that the devisee or legatee should be a trustee, as where there is a direction that the devisee shall be allowed all his costs and expenses, which would be without meaning if he took beneficially (f).

Parol evidence.

18. Where a trust results to the settlor or his representative, not by presumption of law, but by force of the written instrument, the trustee is not at liberty to defeat the resulting trust by the production of extrinsic evidence by parol (g).

trusts (a classification necessary to be made for the purpose of ascertaining the admissibility of parol evidence), we proceed to introduce a few remarks applicable to resulting trusts generally, whether arising by presumption of law, or from the language of the instrument.

In trusts for sale, the undisposed of proceeds result to the heir, not the executor.

First. If real estate be devised upon trust to sell for a particular purpose, and that purpose either wholly fails or does not exhaust the proceeds, the part that remains unapplied, whether the estate has been actually sold or not, will result to the testator's heir, and not to his next of kin (a), and if the testator was seised of the estate ex parte maternâ, the undisposed of interest will result to the maternal heir (b). And the whole or surplus will result in this manner, though the proceeds of the realty be blended with personal estate in the formation of one common fund (c). And even an express declaration that the proceeds of the sale shall be considered as part of the testator's personal estate will not prevent the operation of the rule (d); for a direction of this kind is construed to extend to the purposes of the will only, and not to give a right to those who claim, as the next of kin, by operation of law. The case of Phillips v. Phillips (e), before Sir J. Leach, to the contrary, has repeatedly received the disapprobation of the Court (a), and has now been overruled (b).

The conversion is only for the purposes of the will.

Direction for sale, and that the proceeds shall be personal estate.

If a testator direct the proceeds of the sale to be taken as personal estate, and nothing more is said, then, as every part of the will ought, if possible, to have an operation, the meaning of the testator might be thought to be, that the realty should be converted into personalty for the benefit of the next of kin by implication; and in The Countess of Bristol v. Hungerford (c), where the testator directed the proceeds of the sale to be taken as personal estate, and go to his executors, to whom he gave 20*l.* a-piece, it is said the next of kin were declared entitled. The two next of kin, however, were also the co-heirs, and therefore as utrâque viâ datâ the same persons would claim, it was obviously unnecessary to determine the question. And in a late case where the testator even said, "nothing shall result to the heir-at law," it was held that nevertheless a bequest to the next of kin was not implied, but that the heir-at-law must take in spite of the intention to the contrary (d).

Fitch v. Weber.

Whether the interest results as real or personal estate.

If the execution of the trust require the estate to be sold, but the purposes of the trust do not exhaust the proceeds, the part that is undisposed of will result to the heir in the character of personalty, and, though the sale was not actually effected in his lifetime, will devolve on his executor (e); and in the case of a trust created by a settlor in his lifetime, the undisposed of interest in the proceeds of sale will result to the settlor as personal estate, and go to his personal representative, even though the trust for sale was not to arise until after the settlor's decease (f). If however the trusts declared by the testator so entirely fail as not to call for a conversion, then the whole estate will result to the heir as realty, and descend upon his heir (g), though the estate may by the mistake of the trustees have been actually sold (a), and if the testator was seised ex parte maternâ, the equitable interest will descend to the testator's heir in the maternal line (b).

Sale by Court.

If real estate be devised to A. subject to a charge of debts, and it is sold by the Court, the surplus money, it seems, will not be considered personal estate, so as to devolve on the devisee's personal representative, but will descend to his heir (c); [and the same rule applies to the surplus arising from the sale of mortgaged property under an order made in a foreclosure action (d)].

But in a sale of an infant's estate under an order of the Court, which finds that the sale would be for his benefit, the conversion is absolute, and the proceeds are personalty (e).

Under Partition Act.

In the sale of the property of an infant (f), [or lunatic (g)], under the Partition Act, 1868, which incorporates some of the provisions of the Leases and Sales of Settled Estates' Act, the interest of the infant [or lunatic] retains its character of real estate [and on his death intestate descends to his heir-at-law, but the heir will take it as realty or personalty according to its actual state of investment (h).

So, where in a partition suit a sale was directed of certain real estate, one eighth of which belonged to a married woman in fee, and an order was subsequently made directing that the husband and wife accepting a certain sum as the purchase money of the one-eighth, that sum should be paid into Court, which was accordingly done, but before any conveyance was executed the married woman died, it was held that the purchase money must be treated as realty (i). But since the Partition Act, 1876, if an order be made for the sale of a married woman's share in real estate, with her consent or at her request, it will operate as a conversion (j). Where a sale was ordered in a partition action and the share of a person who was sui juris was ordered to be paid to her, but before payment she became lunatic and afterwards died intestate, it was held that conversion of the share had taken place at the date of the sale (a).

[Where discretion in trustees.]

If trustees have a discretionary power of sale, and an order is made in an administration action directing a sale, the property is converted into personalty as from the date of the order (b).

[Under Lands Clauses Consolidation Act.]

If land of which an infant is seised in fee simple be taken under the provisions of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, and the purchase-money be paid into Court, the money retains the quality of real estate, and on the death of the infant descends to his heir-at-law (c)].

Money to be laid out on land results to the executor.

Secondly. If a testator bequeath money to be laid out in a purchase of land, to be settled to uses which either wholly or partially fail to take effect, the undisposed of interest in the money, or estate if purchased, will result to the [testator's next of kin (d); and will belong to them as realty or personalty, according to its nature in the view of a Court of equity at the time it results (e)].

The old authorities (f) upon the subject are somewhat conflicting; but it will be superfluous to enter upon a particular examination of them, as the case of Cogan v. Stephens (g) before Lord Cottenham, while at the Rolls, finally decided the point in favour of the next of kin.

Appointed fund results to the donee of the power.

Thirdly. "Where" (to use the words of Lord St. Leonards) "there is a power to appoint a settled fund, the execution of the power takes the part appointed entirely out of the settlement. Although, therefore, the beneficial interest in the fund is not in terms expressly disposed of, yet there can be no resulting trust for the benefit of any person under the deed creating the power, for when the fund is appointed it must be considered as if it had never been comprised in the trust, because it is absolutely taken out of it by the execution of the power" (a). If, therefore, a feme covert has in certain events which occur a power to appoint a settled fund by will, and she appoints executors and directs them to apply the fund in payment of legacies which do not exhaust it, [or fail,] the executors hold the surplus in trust, not for the persons entitled under the settlement in default of appointment, but as part of the personal estate of the donee of the power (b). [And there is no distinction in this respect between the cases of real estate and personal estate; and so realty appointed under a general power to trustees for purposes which fail will result to the appointor and go as part of his realty (c). But where under a testamentary power an appointment is made to an intended beneficiary without the interposition of any trustee, on the death of the appointee in the lifetime of the donee of the power the appointment wholly fails, and the appointed funds will revert to the persons entitled in default of appointment (d). [Exceptions.]

[And the mere appointment of an executor is not sufficient evidence of an intention on the part of the appointor to make the property his own; and thus where the donee of the power, who was a married woman and also one of the trustees of the settlement creating the power, directed that the trust property should be held by her co-trustee on certain trusts which failed, and appointed the co-trustee her sole executor, it was held that the gift over in default of appointment took effect (e).]

In a gift of the whole, subject to a charge that may not arise, no trust results.

Fourthly. It often happens, that the settlor makes a primary disposition of the whole property to A. subject to a particular charge in favour of B., and the charge in event either wholly or partially fails so as either not to divest, or only pro tanto to divest the estate of A. The reader must distinguish the preceding cases of resulting trust from such a gift as this; for here, as the entirety is disposed of in the first instance to A., so far as the charge does not exhaust it, there can nothing result to the heir, even should the charge not take effect. The distinction was thus stated by Sir J. Leach:—"If the devise," he said, "to a particular person, or for a particular purpose, be intended by the testator to be an exception from the gift to the residuary devisee, the heir takes the benefit of the failure; but if it be intended to be a charge only upon the estate devised, and not an exception from the gift, the devisee will be entitled to the benefit of the failure" (a).

Gift charged with a contingent legacy.

Thus, if lands be devised to A. charged with a legacy to B. provided B. attain the age of twenty-one, should B. die without attaining that age, the devise has become absolute in A., and the will is to be read as if the legacy to B. had never been mentioned (b). So if the lands be given to A. charged with a legacy to B., and B. dies in the testator's lifetime (c).

Gift charged with a sum to be appointed, and the power not exercised.

The construction is the same, if lands be devised to A. subject to and charged with any sum not exceeding 10,000*l.* to such persons, and in such manner as the testator shall appoint, and the power is either never exercised, or the execution of it is void (d): for here, as the testator confers the whole interest on the devisee, reserving the power, if he either abstain from executing the power, or appoint for an illegal purpose, he does not diminish that interest, but the heir is wholly disinherited (e).

Noel v. Lord Henley.

And where a testator had devised certain estates upon trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay 5000*l.* unto his wife, her executors and administrators, in part satisfaction of the sum of 10,000*l. secured to her by marriage settlement in case of her surviving him,* and to invest the residue upon certain trusts, and the wife died in the lifetime of the husband, so that the 10,000*l.* never became raisable, it was held that the 5000*l.* instead of resulting to the heir was included in the residue (f). The construction put upon the will was, that the whole fund was in the first instance given to the residuary legatees, subject to a charge of 5000*l.* to arise on a certain event, and that contingency having never occurred, the primary devise of the entirety was never divested (a).

Gift of a charge, and "subject thereto" to A.

Again, if an estate be settled to the use of trustees for a term of ninety-nine years, upon trusts that do not exhaust the whole interest, and from and after the expiration, or other sooner determination of the said term, and subject thereto, to uses in strict settlement, the surplus of the term will be in trust, not for the heir, but for the devisees in remainder, for here the intention is express, that subject to trusts which have been exhausted, the remaindermen shall take the whole estate (b). So where an estate was devised to trustees upon trust within one year after the testator's decease to raise 2000*l.* and "after raising the same" upon trusts in strict settlement, the Court held the 2000*l.* to be a charge upon and not an exception out of the estate (c).

"Subject thereto" implied.

And if the limitation be to trustees for ninety-nine years upon the trusts thereinafter expressed, and the instrument makes no mention of the trusts, and from and after the expiration, or other sooner determination of the said term to uses in strict settlement, the Court will consider the intention to be clearly implied, that the remaindermen should have the beneficial enjoyment subject to the term, and will read the will, as if the words subject thereto and to the trusts thereof had been actually expressed (d).

[Charge if actually raised reverts as personal estate.]

[If the amount charged be actually raised, and subsequently the trusts affecting it fail, so that it reverts to the devisee of the estate charged, the devisee will take it as personal estate, for there is no purpose requiring that it should be turned into land again, and no equity in any person to have it laid out in land (e).]

Charity legacies.

There has been much discussion in the Courts how far the rule establishing a distinction between a charge upon and exception from a devise is applicable to a charity legacy. The question is one of difficulty, and before stating the apparent result of the cases, it may be useful to premise a few words as to the principle.

Difference between exception from a devise, and charge upon a devise.

If a testator had, before the Wills Act, devised an estate, worth 10,000*l.*, to trustees in trust to sell, and out of the proceeds to pay 1000*l.* to A., and had given all the residue of his real estate to B., and A. had died in the testator's lifetime, the lapse would have enured to the benefit not of the devisee, but of the heir-at-law; the reason was, that in real estate the word "residue" had not the same meaning as in personal estate, but each devise was considered a specific one, and the 1000*l.* and the 9000*l.* were distinct fractions of the estate, so that if either failed in event, the undisposed of interest resulted to the heir-at-law. If, however, a testator had devised an estate to A. and his heirs charged with a legacy of 1000*l.* to B., and B. had died in the testator's lifetime, then A. would have taken the estate free from the legacy: not that the devisee was intended to take the legacy, quâ legacy, but the testator had constituted a hæres factus to the disinherison at all events of the heir-at-law, and as the legacy was given not directly to the legatee, in which case it would be an exception from the devise of the estate, but had been made a charge to be raised, so far as might be necessary, out of the estate previously devised, the legacy, as in the event it was not required to be raised, sunk for the benefit of the devisee.

Possible distinction in the case of a legacy to a charity.

Now in a devise to A. and his heirs charged with a legacy to a charity, on the one hand it may be said that in the case of an ordinary charge the lapse of the legacy is an incident to the bequest, which the testator may be taken to have contemplated and he may have meant that on the occurrence of that event the devisee should be entitled; but in the instance of a charity, the object of the legacy exists at the testator's death, and the event on which the money was payable has arisen; he could not, therefore, have intended the devisee to take the legacy, which is bequeathed under the very circumstances to the charity; the legacy therefore in this case, though in form a charge, is in fact an exception. On the other hand it may be argued that where the legacy is admitted to be a charge and not an exception, the devisee does not take the legacy because the legacy was intended for him, since then in the case of a lapse the charge would not have sunk for the benefit of the devisee; for in real estate, until the Wills Act, that only went to the devisee which was not otherwise expressed to be disposed of whether the bequest took effect or not, as in the case above noticed of a trust for sale, where the lapse of a legacy out of the proceeds enured to the benefit of the heir, but, nevertheless, in a charge the devisee did take the legacy in case of a lapse, from the form in which the legacy was given; a result which shows the true view to be that the testator first constituted the devisee the hæres factus of the whole estate, which disinherited the heir, and then as the legacy was made a graft upon that estate, and the legacy failed, the estate was exonerated from the burden. Lord Alvanley was of opinion that this was the right ground, and that it mattered not in what way the failure of the legacy arose, whether by lapse, or the unlawfulness of the object: "It is now perfectly settled," said Lord Alvanley, "that if an estate is devised, charged with legacies, and the legacies fail, no matter how, the devisee shall have the benefit of it and take the estate" (a).

Results of the cases.

The cases upon the subject are very conflicting, but the best results that can be obtained from them appear to be these:

(I.) The first inquiry to be made is, whether upon the whole will the testator intended the legacy and the devise to be two distinct independent gifts, flowing directly from himself to the legatee and devisee, or whether he devised the whole estate in the first instance to the devisee to the disinherison of the heir, and then gave the legacy, not as an original gift from the testator to the legatee, but by way of graft upon the estate previously given to the devisee; in the former case the legacy would be an exception (b), and in the latter a charge.

(II.) Assuming the legacy to be, according to the true construction of the will, not an exception but a charge, then if the legacy be given by way of a condition imposed on the devisee, the legacy, as the condition is void, sinks for the devisee's benefit (c).

(III.) If the estate be devised charged with a sum, say of 1000*l*., to be paid to the testator's executors and applied in discharge of his debts and legacies, including a legacy to a charity, in this case the charge is raisable as against the devisee, and the charity legacy will be a resulting trust to the testator's heir-at-law (d).

(IV.) If the estate be simply devised to one, charged with or subject to a legacy in favour of another, and there is nothing on

In Cooke v. Stationers' Company, the M. R. said the condition made no difference, as it was no more than a charge, 3 M. & K. 266.

(d) Arnold v. Chapman, 1 Ves. 108; Henchman v. Attorney-General, 3 M. & K. 494, [where Lord Brougham, L.C., said that Arnold v. Chapman "proceeded upon the ground of the sum given to charitable uses being excepted out of the devise, and so undisposed of, unless the gift was valid, which by the statute it was not."] the face of the will to show that the legacy, though expressed in the form of a charge, was meant to be an exception, then the leaning of the Court at the present day would appear to be in favour of the devisee (a).

(v.) It may be doubted whether the circumstance of a direction for an intermediate payment to the testator's executors of the sum to be raised be a tenable ground of distinction, and should the Court decide in favour of a devisee in a case under the fourth head, such decision would undoubtedly shake those in favour of the heir under the third. It would be a reasonable and intelligible rule to lay down that where the failure of the legacy arises from any event which the testator might reasonably have contemplated, as, the death of the legatee in his lifetime, then the legacy should sink for the benefit of the devisee: but that where the legacy is raisable in the event which has happened, and the legacy is only not paid because the policy of the law, in spite of the intention, forbids it, as in the case of a legacy to a charity, there the legacy was in fact never given to the devisee, and a trust should result for the benefit of the heir. The subject, as the matter now stands, is in a very unsatisfactory state.

The interest that would have resulted may be disposed of by will.

Fifthly. It has been stated in general terms, that, in the cases we have mentioned, a trust will result to the settlor or his real or personal representative, but the doctrine must be received with at least this qualification, that the interest which would have resulted is not otherwise disposed of by the settlor himself.

Any interest that would have resulted may of course be given away from the settlor's representative, by a particular and specific devise or bequest; it remains only to inquire what is the effect of certain general expressions.

Construction of the word "residue" in real estate.

With respect to a testator's realty, the heir "shall sit in the seat of his ancestor," unless the disinherison be expressed or clearly implied. The word "residue," therefore, had, before the Wills Act, received in devises a strict and narrow construction, and was held to mean, not all that the testator had not actually disposed of, but only so much of which he had shown no intention of disposing. Thus, if lands had been devised upon trust to raise 5000*l.* for a charity, the residue to A. (a), or upon trust to raise 5000*l.* for a charity, with a general devise "of all the residue of the testator's real estate, whatsoever and wheresoever" (b), in either case the void legacy would have resulted to the heir, and not have been included in the residuary clause. Now, by the Wills Act, a residuary devise, unless a contrary intention appear by the will, is made to sweep every interest undisposed of in real estate, as a residuary bequest already did in respect of personal estate (c).

Construction of "personal estate" as applicable to proceeds from sale of real estate.

If a testator direct his lands to be sold, and afterwards add a general bequest of all his personal estate (d), or appoint a person residuary executor (e), any part of the proceeds of the sale that is undisposed of will not form part of the residuary fund in the first case, or pass to the residuary executor in the second; for nothing, properly speaking, is a testator's "personal estate," but what possesses that character at the moment of his decease (f).

"Personal estate" in certain cases may pass such proceeds.

But the intention of converting the property absolutely by the sale, so as to make the proceeds undisposed of by the will pass by the description of the testator's "personal estate," may be collected from a will specially worded (g); and the blending of the real and personal estate into one fund will be regarded as a circumstance in some degree indicative of such an intention (h), and this of course will be the case, where the testator expressly directs the proceeds to be considered as part of his personalty (i).

Whether a gift of residuary personal estate will pass lapsed legacies from proceeds of sale of real estate.

The question was much discussed before the Wills Act, and may still be material, what expressions of a testator will amount to such an absolute conversion of real estate into personal, that a void or lapsed legacy given out of the proceeds of the sale shall, as if the property had been personal, fall into the residuary bequest, instead of resulting to the heir. "I agree," said Lord Brougham, "a testator may provide that lapsed and void legacies shall go in this manner, as if the testator say in express words, 'I give all lapsed and void legacies as parcel of my residue to the residuary legatee,' and if he can do it by express words, he can do it by plain and obvious intention to be gathered from the whole instrument" (a). But what will amount to such an implication is a point that can with difficulty be brought under any very definite rule.

Results of the authorities.

Apparently the only principle to be extracted from the authorities is, that a lapsed or void legacy will pass to the residuary legatee, if the testator expressly declare that the proceeds of the sale shall be considered as "personal estate," or if the intention of an absolute conversion into personal estate for all the purposes of the will can, without the aid of any such express declaration, be gathered from the general structure of the will (b).

Next of kin and residuary legatee distinguished.

It was stated in a former page, that if a testator direct the proceeds of the sale to be taken as "personal estate," a part of the proceeds undisposed of by him will nevertheless not result to the next of kin. The distinction between the next of kin and the residuary legatee is this: the former claim dehors the will, while the latter is a claimant under the will, and when the proceeds of the sale are directed to be taken as personalty, the testator must be understood to mean for the purposes of the will only, and not for any object beyond it.

Resulting trust of personal estate.

With respect to resulting trusts of personal estate, the general residuary bequest was always held to sweep every interest, whether undisposed of by the will, or undisposed of in event, and therefore is is only where the will contains no residuary clause that the next of kin can assert a claim to the benefit of the resulting interest (a). But if any part of the personal estate be expressly excepted from the residue, as if a testator reserve a sum to be disposed of by a codicil, and give the residue not disposed of or reserved to be disposed of to A., and no codicil is executed, the sum so specially excepted will then result to the next of kin (b).

Case of settlor or devisor dying without heir or next of kin.

Sixthly. [In the case of the death of a settlor intestate, without heir or next of kin, the undisposed of beneficial interest in real estate, if the death occurred before the 14th August, 1884, sank into the land for the benefit of the trustee or legal tenant (c); and where the death occurs since that date, it escheats to the lord as if the interest were a legal estate in corporeal hereditaments (d);] but in the case of personalty the resulting interest, as bonum vacans, will fall to the Crown by the prerogative (e).

Of resulting trusts in gifts to charities.

Lastly, it may be noticed that settlements to charitable purposes are an exception from the law of resulting trusts: for, upon the construction of instruments of this kind, the Court has adopted the following rules:—

Where no object expressed, the Court will direct the application of the estate to some charity.

(1.) Where a person makes a valid gift, whether by deed or will, and expresses a general intention of charity, but either particularises no objects (f), or such as do not exhaust the proceeds (g), the Court will not suffer the property in the first case, or the surplus in the second, to result to the settlor or his representative, but will take upon itself to execute the general intention, by declaring the particular purposes to which the fund shall be applied.

Where the rents increase, the surplus will be applied to like charitable purposes.

(II.) Where a person settles lands, or the rents and profits of lands to purposes which at the time exhaust the whole proceeds, but, in consequence of an increase in the value of the estate, an excess of income subsequently arises, the Court will order the surplus, instead of resulting, to be applied in the same or a similar manner with the original amount (a).

Exceptions from the foregoing rules.

(III.) But even in the case of charity, if the settlor do not give the land, or the whole rents of the land, but, noticing the property to be of a certain value, appropriates part only to the charity, the residue will then, according to the circumstances of the case, either result to the heir at law (b), or will belong to the donee of the property subject to the charge, if the donee be (as in the case of a charitable corporation) itself an object of charity (c).

The doctrine in favour of charities established before trusts were settled.

The exceptions we have noticed were established at an early period, when the doctrine of resulting trusts was imperfectly understood (d). The interest of the heir was shut entirely out of sight, and the question was viewed as between the charity and the trustee (a). Were the subject still unprejudiced by authority, there is little doubt but the Court would, at the present day, follow the general principle, and hold a trust to result (b).

SECTION II.

OF RESULTING TRUSTS UPON PURCHASES IN THE NAMES OF THIRD PERSONS.

PURCHASES of this kind are governed by different rules, according to the relation which subsists at the time between the person who pays the money, and the person in whose name the conveyance is taken. We must, therefore, distribute the subject under two heads: First, Purchases in the name of a stranger; and Secondly, Purchases in the name of a child, or wife, or near relative.

First. Where the purchase is in the name of a stranger.

General rule.

1. "The clear result," said Lord Chief Baron Eyre, "of all the cases, without a single exception, is that the trust of a legal estate, whether freehold, copyhold, or leasehold; whether taken in the names of the purchasers and others jointly, or in the name of others without that of the purchaser; whether in one name or several, whether jointly (c), or successivè (d), results to the man who advances the purchase money (e); and it goes on a strict analogy to the rule of the common law, that where a feoffment is made without consideration, the use results to the feoffor" (a).

Who in particular cases is the real purchaser.

2. But no trust will result unless the person advance the money in the character of a purchaser; for if A. discharge the purchase money by way of loan to B., in whose name the conveyance is taken, no trust will result in favour of A., who is merely a creditor of B. (b). And, on the other hand, should B. advance the purchase money, but only on account of A., then A. is the owner in equity, and B., who takes the conveyance, stands in the light of a creditor (c).

Principle applicable to personalty.

3. Not only real estate but personalty also is governed by these principles, as if a man take a bond (d), or purchase an annuity (e), stock (f), or other chattel interest (g), in the name of a stranger, the equitable ownership results to the person from whom the consideration moved.

Joint advance and purchase in name of third person.

4. In Crop v. Norton (h) Lord Hardwicke doubted whether the rule was not confined to an individual purchaser. But in Wray v. Steele (i) the point was expressly decided in conformity with the general principle; for what was there applicable to an advance by a single individual which was not equally applicable to a joint advance under similar circumstances?

Joint advance and purchase as joint-tenants.

5. If two persons, joining in a purchase, take the conveyance not in the name of a stranger, or of one of themselves, but in the names of both of themselves as joint-tenants, then a distinction must be observed between an equal and an unequal contribution.

Equal contribution.

In the former case there is nothing on which to ground the presumption of a resulting trust, for persons making equal advances might very consistently take an estate in joint tenancy, as each has it in his power to compel a partition, or by executing a conveyance to pass a moiety of the estate, and in the meantime each runs his own life against that of the other (j). And so, if two persons contract for a purchase in favour of them and their heirs, and one of them dies, the Court, if they paid equal proportions, will specifically perform the agreement, by ordering a conveyance, not to the heir of the deceased person and the survivor as tenants in common, but to the survivor alone (a). But even where equal contributors take a conveyance in joint-tenancy, collateral circumstances may induce a Court of Equity to construe it a tenancy in common (b). Thus where two tenants in common, of a mortgage term, purchased the equity of redemption to them and their heirs, it was held that the nature of the inheritance should follow that of the term (c); for if two persons join in lending money upon mortgage, equity says it could not have been the intention that the interest in that should survive, but though they took a joint security, each meant to lend his own, and take back his own (d), [and the insertion of a joint account clause is not conclusive to the contrary (e).] And in all cases of a joint undertaking or partnership, by way of trade, or upon the hazard of profit and loss, the jus accrescendi is excluded, and the survivors are trustees, in due proportions, for the representatives of those who are dead (f). And where the purchasers pay equally, and take a joint estate, and one afterwards improves the property at his own cost, he has a lien upon the land pro tanto for the money he has expended (g).

Should the contribution of the parties be unequal, then in all cases a trust results to each of them in proportion to the amount originally subscribed (h).

In Clark v. Danvers (e) the plaintiff was both heir and executor of the equitable owner, and was decreed the benefit of the trust. In Howe v. Howe (f) the administratrix was held entitled, and so it was allowed in Rundle v. Rundle (g), and Withers v. Withers (h), and was subsequently sanctioned by the high authority of Lord Mansfield (i). Now by the Wills Act (7 W. 4. and 1 Vict. c. 26, s. 6) it is declared, that, where there is no special occupant, an estate pur autre vie whether in freehold or in copyhold shall, if not disposed of by the will of the grantee, go to his personal representative (j).

Purchase of a ship in stranger's name.

7. The Court cannot imply a resulting trust in evasion of an Act of Parliament, and therefore [under the old Registry Acts,] if A., on purchasing a ship, took the transfer in the name of B., the complete ownership, both legal and equitable, was in B. (k). In order to enforce the navigation laws, and secure to British subjects the exclusive enjoyment of British privileges, the Registry Acts required an exact history to be kept of every ship, how far throughout her existence she had been British built and British owned, and if implied trusts were permitted the whole intent of the legislature might have been indirectly defeated (l).

Exceptions to the rule.

However, in certain cases [even under the old law a person might have been] the registered owner and still have been a trustee. When, for instance, one of the members of a firm had a ship registered in his name, it was held by him in trust for the firm including the other partners (a). And when a ship was registered by mistake in the name of a person who was not the owner of it, and where the person who transferred it to him had no interest in it, the transferee did not acquire such a title to the ship as to deprive the rightful owner of it (b). [And in delivering judgment in the case of Holderness v. Lamport, Sir J. Romilly, M.R., observed,] "If letters of administration were obtained to the estate of a shipowner, and the administrator transferred the ship into his own name, and afterwards a will was discovered and probate granted to the executor, could it be contended that the executor was precluded from obtaining the ship, because another person had, bonâ fide but by mistake, been registered as the owner?" (c).

[The law has, however, been lately modified so as to allow of a beneficial interest in a ship in persons not appearing on the register, and under the Acts now in force, although no notice of a trust is allowed on the register, equities may be enforced against the registered owners of ships or shares of ships in the same manner as they may be enforced in respect of any other personal property (d), and it follows that if a ship be purchased by A. in the name of a stranger, there will be a resulting trust in favour of A.] [Recent statutes.]

8. While the papistry laws were in force, if A., a papist, had purchased an estate in the name of B., the Court could not have presumed a resulting trust to A., which as soon as raised, would have become forfeitable to the State (e). Resulting trusts under papistry Acts.

9. And so if a purchaser take a conveyance in the name of another, with a view of giving him a vote for a member of parliament, he cannot afterwards claim the beneficial ownership, for the operation of such a right would render the original purchase fraudulent (f). In purchases for giving votes.

But any equities in respect of such patent, design, or trade mark may be enforced in like manner as in respect of any other personal property (a).]

Parol evidence as regards Statute of Frauds.

11. As the Statute of Frauds (b) extends to creations or declarations of trusts by parties only, and does not affect, indeed expressly excepts, trusts arising by operation or construction of law, it is competent for the real purchaser to prove his payment of the purchase-money by parol, even though it be otherwise expressed in the deed.

In Kirk v. Webb (c) the Court refused to admit evidence, and the decision was followed in subsequent cases (d); however, the doctrine, though supported by numerous precedents, has since been clearly overthrown by the concurrent authority of the most distinguished judges (e).

Purchase by an agent.

The rule as at present established will not warrant the admission of parol evidence, where an estate is purchased by an agent, and no part of the consideration is paid by the employer; for though an agent is a trustee in equity, yet the trust is one arising ex contractu, and not resulting by operation of law (f). The agent may be indicted for perjury in denying his character, and may be convicted, yet the Court has no power to decree the trust (g).

The employer, therefore, as he could not profit by the conviction, was never prevented by interest from being a witness against the agent (a).

Parol evidence must be clear.

And parol evidence, where admitted, must prove the fact very clearly (b); though no objection lies against the reception of circumstantial evidence, as that the means of the pretended purchaser were so slender as to make it impossible he should have paid the purchase-money himself (c).

Trust may be proved against defendant's denial.

And should the nominal purchaser deny the trust by his answer the solemnity of the defendant's oath will of course require a considerable weight of evidence to overcome its impression (d).

Of written evidence after the death of the nominal purchaser.

12. It is laid down by Mr. Sanders, that "if a person at his death leave any papers disclosing the real circumstances of the case, the Court will raise the trust even against the express declaration of the purchase-deed" (e). We have seen that, according to the latest authorities, parol evidence is in ordinary cases admissible against the language of the purchase-deed; but if Mr. Sanders's opinion to the contrary were well founded, it does not appear how mere papers would satisfy the requisitions of the statute; for, to have that effect, the writings ought also to be signed by the party. The cases of Ryall v. Ryall (f) and Lane v. Dighton (g), which are cited for the position, do not at all turn upon the distinction suggested.

Of parol evidence after the death of the nominal purchaser.

13. It is observed by the same writer, that, "after the death of the supposed nominal purchaser, parol proof alone can in no instance be admitted against the express declaration of the

Eq. 182 (which does not appear to have been cited in James v. Smith), is, no doubt, difficult to reconcile with Bartlett v. Pickersgill; but upon the whole it is submitted that that case is still an authority, at all events in cases where the conduct of the agent is not proved to be fraudulent.]

deed" (a); but the cases relied upon in support of this doctrine (b) do not distinguish between proofs in a person's lifetime and after his decease; they are certainly authorities for the exclusion of parol evidence universally, but in this respect, as before noticed, they have been subsequently overruled. It would seem upon principle, that the death of the nominal purchaser cannot affect the admissibility of parol testimony, whatever effect it may have in detracting from its weight.

Of following trust-money into land.

14. In the question, whether a purchase in the name of a third person can be established by parol testimony, is also involved the question, whether trust money can be followed into land by parol. A purchase with trust money is virtually a purchase paid for by the cestuis que trust; and on the ground that such a purchase is a trust resulting by operation of law, and not within the purview of the Statute of Frauds, it has been settled that parol evidence is clearly admissible (c).

The resulting trust may be rebutted by parol.

15. As in the cases we have been considering the trust results to the real purchaser by presumption of law, which is merely an arbitrary implication in the absence of reasonable proof to the contrary, the nominal purchaser is at liberty to rebut the presumption by the production of parol evidence showing the intention of conferring the beneficial interest (d); and the evidence to rebut need not be as strong as evidence to create a trust (e). And as he may repel the presumption in toto, so may he in part; as by proving the purchaser's intention to permit the legal tenant to enjoy beneficially for life (f); [or, where stock has been transferred into the joint names of the transferor and another person, by proving the intention of the transferor to have the dividends for his life, and that the transfer should enure for the benefit of such other person if he survived the transferor (g).]

16. When it has been once ascertained that the understanding of the parties at the time of the purchase was that the legal owner should also be the beneficial owner, it is not competent to the person who paid the money to put a different construction upon the instrument at any subsequent period, and claim the estate against his intentions at the time (a); and even if under such circumstances the legal tenant agreed afterwards to execute a conveyance to the person who paid the money, the Court would not enforce the contract, if merely voluntary (b). Declarations subsequent to the purchase.

17. The real purchaser may be barred of his interest by laches, for the presumption of a resulting trust will not be raised, after a great length of time, more particularly if it be in opposition to the evidence afforded by the actual enjoyment (c). Effect of time.

Secondly. Where the purchase is made by a person in the name of a child, or wife, or near relative.

Where a father purchases in the name of his child, the presumption of law is, that a provision was intended (d). The grounds of this doctrine are well stated by Lord Chief Baron Eyre (e). "The circumstance," he said, "of one or more of the nominees being a child or children of the purchaser, is held to operate by rebutting the resulting trust; and it has been determined in so many cases that the nominee being a child shall have such operation as a circumstance of evidence, that it would be disturbing landmarks if we suffered either of these proposi- Advancement. tions to be called into question;—namely, That such circumstance shall rebut the resulting trust; and, That it shall do so as a circumstance of evidence. I think it would have been a more simple doctrine, if the children had been considered as purchasers for valuable consideration. This way of considering it would have shut out all the circumstances of evidence which have found their way into many of the cases, and would have prevented some very nice distinctions, and not very easy to be understood. Considering it as a circumstance of evidence, there must, of course, be evidence admitted on the other side. Thus it was resolved into a question of intent, which was getting into a very wide sea without very certain guides."

The difficulties arising from the light in which the question has been viewed will amply appear from the numerous refined distinctions upon which the Court from time to time has been called upon to adjudicate.

Case of the child being an infant.

1. A distinction was formerly taken where the child was an infant (a); for a parent, it was said, could scarcely have intended to bestow a separate and independent provision upon one utterly incapable of undertaking the management of it. But still more improbable was the supposition that an infant should have been selected as a trustee (b), and accordingly the notion has long since been overruled (c); nay, the infancy of the child is now looked upon as a circumstance particularly favourable (d).

Purchase of a reversionary estate.

2. It was objected, that a reversionary estate, from the uncertainty of the time when it would fall into possession, was not such a kind of interest as a parent would prudently purchase by way of provision for a child; but mere proximity or remoteness of the enjoyment, whether the reversion be expectant on the decease of the parent or a stranger, has since been held clearly insufficient to countervail the general rule (e).

Purchase in joint names of father and son.

3. A purchase in the joint names of the father and son has met with objections; "for this," observed Lord Hardwicke, "does not answer the purpose of an advancement, as it entitles the father to the possession of the whole till a division, and to a moiety absolutely even after a division, besides the father's taking a chance to himself of being a survivor of the other moiety: nay, if the son die during his minority, the father would be entitled to the whole by survivorship, and the son could not prevent it by severance, he being an infant" (a). But surely no improvidence can be justly charged on a parent who so settles his estate, that if the son die a minor it shall revert to himself; that until the marriage of the son or other pressing occasion, the father and son shall possess an equal interest during their joint lives, with the right of survivorship as to the whole; that the son shall have the power, when necessary, of settling one moiety of the estate, but shall leave the other moiety to his parent. Whatever opinion may be entertained as to the principle, the doubts above expressed by Lord Hardwicke can scarcely be maintained in opposition to repeated decisions (b). A purchase in the joint names of the son and a stranger is less favourable to the supposition of an intended advancement (c); but even here the right of the child is now indisputably established (d). However, the advancement cannot be more extensive than the legal estate in the child (e); and therefore the stranger, quatenus the legal estate vested in him, must hold upon trust for the father (f).

Purchase of copyholds granted for lives successivè.

4. It is the custom, in many manors, to make grants for lives successivè. Should a father pay a fine upon a grant to himself and his two sons, shall this be held an advancement or a trust? Upon the difficulty of this case, Lord Chief Baron Eyre remarked, that "when the lessees were to take successivè, the father could not take the whole in his own name, but must insert other names in the lease, and that there might be many prudential reasons for putting in the life of a child as trustee for him, in preference to any other person." (g). And in accordance with this reasoning was decided the case of Dickinson v. Shaw (h); but in Dyer v. Dyer (i) the notion was overruled as savouring too much of refinement; and so at the present day it must be considered as settled (a).

Child already provided for.

5. It may happen, that the child in whose name the purchase is taken may have been already provided for, a circumstance of very considerable weight in rebutting the presumption of further advancement. "The rule of equity," said Lord Chief Baron Eyre, "as recognised in other cases, is, that the father is the only judge on the question of a son's provision, and therefore the distinction of the son being provided for or not is not very solidly taken" (b). However, the distinction has been relied upon in several cases (c), and has been repeatedly recognised by the highest authorities (d). At the same time, it must be noticed that the prior advancement of the child has always been accompanied with some additional circumstance that tended to strengthen the presumption that no further provision was designed (e); and Lord Loughborough laid down the general rule to be, that a purchase made by a father in the name of a son, already fully advanced and established by him, not was but might be, a trust for the father (f).

Whether child considered as provided for when adult.

It is said by Lord Chief Baron Gilbert, that "if a father purchase in the name of a son who is full of age, which by our law is an emancipation out of the power of the father, there if the father take the profits, etc., the son is a trustee for the father" (g). But for this opinion there appears to be not the slightest ground (h). The provision must exist not by a fiction of law, but bonâ fide and substantially; "as," said Lord Nottingham, "if the son be married in his father's lifetime, and with his father's consent, and a settlement be thereupon made, whereby the son appears to be fully advanced, and in a manner emancipated" (i). A provision in part will not have the effect of rebutting the presumption of advancement (j); and the settlement of a reversionary estate upon the son will not be deemed a provision, for he might starve before it fell into possession (a).

Previous provision in part.

Reversionary estate not a provision.

Case of father holding the possession, and child an infant.

6. Suppose the father continues, after the purchase, in the perception of the rents and profits, and exerts other acts of ownership, then, if the son be an infant, it is said, as the parent is the natural guardian of the child, the perception of the profits or other exercise of dominion shall be referred to that ground, and the right of the son shall not be prejudiced, and so in numerous cases the point has been adjudged (b); and it will not vary the case if the son sign receipts in the name of the father, for during his minority he could give no other receipts that would discharge the tenants who hold by lease from his father (c). Lord Chief Baron Eyre expressed himself dissatisfied with this reasoning in reference to the guardianship (d), and Lord Nottingham referred the decisions to a higher ground. "Some," he said, "have taken the difference, that where the father has colour to receive the rents as guardian, there perception of profits is no evidence of a trust: otherwise it would be if the perception of profits were without any such colour. Plainly the reason of the resolutions stands not upon the guardianship, but upon the presumptive advancement, for a purchase in the name of an infant stranger (that is, notwithstanding the relation of guardian and ward) with perception of profits, etc., will be evidence of a trust" (e).

Chief Baron Eyre's opinion.

Case of a father holding the possession, and son adult.

7. Suppose the father purchases in the name of the son who is adult, and then, without contradiction from the son, takes the rents and profits, and exerts other acts of ownership; even here it has been determined that the right of the son will prevail. A stronger instance can hardly be conceived than occurred in the very leading case of Grey v. Grey (f), before Lord Nottingham. We have his lordship's own manuscript of this case, and the circumstances are thus stated:—"The evidence to prove this purchase in the name of the son to be a trust for the father consists of—1st, father possessed the money; 2ndly, received the profits twenty years; 3rdly, made leases; 4thly, took fines; 5thly, enclosed part in a park; 6thly, built much; 7thly, provided materials for more; 8thly, directed Lord Chief Justice North to draw a settlement; 9thly, treated about the sale of it" (a): yet, for all this, it was decided, after long and mature deliberation, that the consideration of blood and affection was so predominant, that the father's perception of rents and profits, or making leases, or the like acts, which the son, in good manners, did not contradict, could not countervail it (b). The propriety of this decision, upon principle independently of authority, has been called into question (c). It might perhaps be successfully contended, that Lord Nottingham's determination was founded upon the more enlarged view of the subject in respect even of principle; however, the point must at the present day be considered as settled at least upon authority, if any point can be considered as settled after repeated decisions (d).

[Policy on father's life.]

[So if a father effects a policy of assurance on his own life in the name of a child, and himself pays the premiums and retains the policy until the time of his death, the child will be entitled to the benefit of the policy (e).]

[Contract of purchase by son only.]

[Where a contract to purchase a business was entered into by the son alone, the purchase-money being payable by instalments, and the father paid a sum in cash, and the rest was secured by the joint and several promissory notes of the father and son, it was held that the case was not one of advancement, but merely of suretyship (f).]

Evidence from facts to rebut the presumption.

8. The advancement of the son is a mere question of intention, and, therefore, facts antecedent to or contemporaneous with the purchase (g), or so immediately after it as to constitute part of the same transaction (h), may properly be put in evidence for the purpose of rebutting the presumption. Thus it will not be held an advancement, if, on a grant of copyholds to a father and his son for their lives successivè, the father at the same Court surrenders the copyholds to the use of his will (a), or obtains a license from the lord to lease for years (b), or takes possession by some overt act immediately consequent upon the purchase (c), or serves a notice with a view of taking possession, and then waives it and receives the rents, &c. (d), [or if a father transfers shares in companies into his son's name for the purpose of qualifying him as a director (e).]

Evidence from parol declaration.

So the father may prove a parol declaration of trust by himself, either before or at the time of the purchase, not that it operates by way of declaration of trust (for the Statute of Frauds would interfere to prevent it); but as the trust would result to the father, were it not rebutted by the sonship as a circumstance of evidence, the father may counteract that circumstance by the evidence arising from his parol declaration of intention (f). But his evidence is admissible for the purpose of proving what was the intention at the time (g).

Evidence on the part of a child.

On the other hand, the son may produce parol evidence to prove the intention of advancement (h), and a fortiori such evidence is admissible on his side, as it tends to support both the legal operation and equitable presumption of the instrument (i). And it seems the subsequent acts and declarations of the father may be used against him by the son, though they cannot be used in his favour (j), and so the subsequent acts or declarations of the son may be used against him by the father, provided he was a party to the purchase, and his construction of the transaction may be taken as an index to the intention of the father (a); but not otherwise, for the question is, not what did the son, but what did the father mean by the purchase?

[Where the parties to the transaction are alive and give evidence, there is no occasion to resort to any presumption (b).]

Rule not to be eluded by nice refinements.

9. From the manner in which the Court has disposed of the several distinctions we have been considering, one general principle is to be extracted applicable to every case. "We think," said Chief Baron Eyre, "that reasons which partake of too great a degree of refinement should not prevail against a rule of property, which is so well established as to become a land-mark, and which, whether right or wrong, should be carried throughout" (c); and Lord Eldon to the same effect observed, "that the Court in Dyer v. Dyer meant to establish this principle, that the purchase is an advance primâ facie, and in this sense, that this principle of law and presumption is not to be frittered away by mere refinements" (d).

Rule applies to an illegitimate child.

10. The doctrine of advancement has been applied to the case of even an illegitimate son (e); for it is said the principle is, that a father is under a moral duty to provide for his child, and as the obligation extends to the case of an illegitimate child, he is equally entitled to the benefit of the presumption (f). But the doctrine will not be applied to the illegitimate son of a legitimate child of the real purchaser, the person who paid the purchase-money, though such purchaser may have placed himself loco parentis to the illegitimate grandchild (g).

Rule applies to daughters as well as sons.

11. It has been said that the presumption of advancement is not so strong in favour of a daughter as of a son, because daughters are not generally provided for by a settlement of real estate (h); but the distinction has been contradicted by more than one decision, and does not now exist (i).

12. Advancement will be presumed in the case of a wife (a), and this presumption may, as in that of a child, be rebutted by the special circumstances under which the transfer was made (b). But no presumption will arise in favour of a reputed wife, being the sister of a former wife, and therefore not legally married (c); and the presumption will be made where the purchase is taken in the name of a grandchild, where the father is dead (d), or of a nephew who had been adopted as a son (e); but it seems that the advancement will not be presumed in favour of a more remote relation, and à fortiori not of a stranger, though the real purchaser may have placed himself loco parentis (f).

Rule applies to a wife, and grandchild or nephew, towards whom the purchaser stands in loco parentis.

[13. The doctrine of advancement has been applied to the case of an investment by a husband in the joint names of himself, his wife and strangers (g).]

Case of investment in joint names of purchaser, his wife, and strangers.

14. The cases of advancement are generally those of a father, but [the question has arisen on several occasions whether the principle is applicable as between mother and child, and has given rise to some difference of opinion. On the balance of the authorities as well as on principle, it would seem that the true rule is, that, as a Court of Equity recognises no such obligation according to the rules of equity in a mother to provide for her child as exists in the case of a father, so the mere purchase or investment in the name of the child is not sufficient per se to raise a presumption of advancement, but, to entitle the child to the property, there must be some evidence of intention on the part of the mother, either to place herself in loco parentis or to advance the child. However, very slight evidence of intention is sufficient, there being very little additional motive required beyond the relationship to induce a mother to make a gift to her child (a); and the principle] does not apply to a step-mother (b).

Purchase-money not paid, a debt from parent.

15. Where the purchase is held to be an advancement, and the purchase-money has not been paid, it will be a charge on the father's assets as an ordinary debt (c); and the conveyance, where the contract in favour of the wife or child remains to be executed, will be made to the wife or child, though the real purchaser's executor pays the purchase-money, for it is not the case of a volunteer (viz., the wife or child), calling for specific performance, but the vendor on his side has a right to enforce the contract and compel payment of the price, and then the Court settles the conveyance in the form in which, according to the contract, it was meant to be taken, viz., in favour of the wife or child (d).

Advancement applies to personalty.

16. Of course, the doctrine of advancement applies to personal as well as real estate; as where a father purchases stock in the name of his son (e), or daughter (f), [or transfers stock into the joint names of a married daughter and her husband (g).]

CHAPTER X.

OF CONSTRUCTIVE TRUSTS.

General doctrine.

1. A constructive trust (a) is raised by a court of equity, wherever a person, clothed with a fiduciary character, gains some personal advantage by availing himself of his situation as trustee; for as it is impossible that a trustee should be allowed to make a profit by his office, it follows that so soon as the advantage in question is shown to have been acquired through the medium of a trust, the trustee, however good a legal title he may have, will be decreed in equity to hold for the benefit of his cestui que trust.

Renewal of leases.

2. A common instance of a constructive trust occurs in the renewal of leases; the rule being, that if a trustee (b), or executor (c), or even an executor de son tort (d), renew a lease in his own name, he will be deemed in equity to be trustee for those interested in the original term.

Rumford Market case.

The leading authority upon this subject is Sandford v. Keech, commonly called the Rumford Market Case (e). A lessee of the profits of a market had devised the lease to a trustee for an infant, and the trustee applied for a renewal on behalf of the infant, which was refused, on the ground that there could be no distress of the profits of a market, but the remedy must rest singly in covenant, of which an infant was incapable. Upon this the trustee took a lease for the benefit of himself; but Lord King said, "I very well see, if a trustee, on the refusal to renew, might have a lease to himself, few trust estates would be renewed to cestui que use. This may seem hard, that the trustee is the only person of all mankind who might not have the lease, but it is very proper that the rule should be strictly pursued, and not in the least relaxed." And so he decreed the lease to be assigned to the infant.

Rule applicable to tenant for life, &c.

3. Upon the same principle, if a person, possessing only a partial interest in a lease, as a tenant for life (a), though with an absolute power of appointment, but which he does not exercise (b), a mortgagee (c), devisee subject to debts and legacies (d), or to an annuity (e), a joint tenant (f), or partner (g), renew the term upon his own account, he shall hold for the benefit of all parties interested in the old lease; for in consideration of equity the subject of the settlement is not only the lease, but also the right of renewal; and no person taking only a limited interest can avail himself of the situation in which the settlement has placed him to obtain a disproportionate advantage in derogation of the rights of others who have similar claims.

[So where a lessee had assigned the original lease by way of settlement and subsequently, without disclosing the settlement, took a new lease for a longer term in consideration of (in addition to a money payment) the surrender of the lease which was erroneously stated to be vested in him, the renewed lease was held to be bound by the settlement (h).]

Even to a yearly tenant.

4. Even where a testator was possessed of leaseholds, and devised all his interest therein to A. for life, remainder to B., and the lease having expired in the testator's lifetime, he was at his death a mere yearly tenant, it was held that A., having renewed the lease, must hold it upon the limitations of the will, for the yearly tenancy was an interest capable of transmission by devise; and the tenant for life could not, by acting on the good-will that accompanied the possession, get the exclusive benefit of a more durable term (a).

[So if the legal personal representative of a tenant from year to year of lands in Ireland, procure by reason of any tenant right custom, a renewal of the tenancy or a regrant to himself, he will take the lands impressed with a trust for the benefit of the estate of the deceased tenant (b).]

Case of tenant at will, or at sufferance.

5. But if a testator be merely tenant at will, or at sufferance, then, if the executor renew, he is not a trustee for the devisees, for as there was no interest upon which the will could operate, there was in fact no devise (c). And so, where a testator possessed leaseholds for years and was in possession of other lands without title under the mistaken impression that they were contained in the lease, and devised the lands he held upon lease to A., his executrix, for life, with remainder over, and A. obtained a lease of the lands not passed by the will, it was ruled that no trust attached upon the term in favour of the remainderman (d). But although the devisees cannot claim in these cases, the executor himself will not be allowed to keep the beneficial interest; but it will be an accretion to the general estate (e).

Agent of trustee cannot renew for his own benefit.

6. Neither can an agent (f), or other person acting under the authority of a trustee, executor, or tenant for life, renew for his own benefit (g).

Trustee may not sell the right of renewal.

7. And if, instead of taking a renewal himself, the trustee, executor, or tenant for life, dispose of the right of renewal for a valuable consideration, the purchase-money will be subjected in equity to the trusts of the settlement; for if a person cannot appropriate the renewal to himself, the Court will not suffer him to sell for his own benefit (a).

What particular circumstances will not vary the general rule.

8. In the preceding cases the rules of equity will still hold good, though the lease had not customarily been renewed (b), or the period of the old lease had actually expired (c), or the renewal was for a different term, or at a different rent (d), or instead of a chattel lease, was for lives (e), or other lands were demised not comprised in the original lease (f), or the landlord refused to renew to the cestui qui trust (g), or the co-trustees refused to concur in a renewal for the cestui que trust's benefit (h), or the lessee having purchased the immediate reversion, being a term of years, took the renewal from the superior landlord (i).

Nesbitt v. Tredennick.

9. But where a lessee of lands in Ireland charged a lease with a jointure, and then mortgaged it to Newcomen and again to Nesbitt, and afterwards the rent falling in arrear, the landlord recovered possession upon ejectment, and the lessee allowed six months (the period of redemption by the lessee fixed by the statute) (j) to pass without tendering the rent, fines and costs, and Nesbitt (who as mortgagee, had three months longer to redeem under the statute), sent notice to the lessee that he would not redeem, but that if the lessee himself did not proceed, he should make the best bargain he could with the landlord, and then offered to take a new lease, to commence from the expiration of three months, with a proviso, that if any other of the parties interested should make a lodgment before that time, the agreement should be void, Lord Manners said that in all the previous cases the party had obtained the renewal by being in possession, or it was done behind the back, or by some contrivance in fraud of those who were interested in the old lease, and there was either a remnant of the old lease, or a tenant-right of renewal, on which the new lease could be ingrafted; but that here no part of Nesbitt's conduct showed a contrivance, nor was he in possession, and all that Nesbitt treated for was a new lease, giving, however, full opportunity to the lessee to dispose of his interest, or to renew, if he was enabled to do so. And under these circumstances his Lordship held that the lease granted to the mortgagee was not bound by any trust for the mortgagor (a).

Trustee's lien for expenses of renewal.

10. A trustee or executor who has renewed a lease has a lien upon the estate for the costs and expenses of the renewal, with interest (b); and where lands are taken under the new lease that were not comprised in the original lease, the Court will apportion the expenses according to the value of the respective lands (c). The trustee will also be allowed for money subsequently laid out in lasting improvements (d), though made during the suit for recovering the lease (e).

Expenses incurred by tenant for life.

11. In the case of a renewal by tenant for life, if he put in his own life, he of course can have no claim to reimbursement (f), but if he put in the life of another, the expenses will be apportioned at the death of the tenant for life, according to the time of his actual enjoyment of the renewed interest (g); and his estate will be a creditor on the premises for the apportionment, though the remaindermen be his own children, who resist the claim on the ground of advancement (h).

Contribution to fine by annuitants.

12. In the case of a testator devising all his interest in leaseholds subject to an annuity, the question of the annuitant's contribution has been differently regarded by different judges. In Maxwell v. Ashe (i), the case of a will, Sir John Strange decided that the annuitant was not bound to contribute; and in Moody v. Matthews (j), where a feme sold an annuity to A. for his life, out of tithes held by her upon lease, and covenanted to pay the annuity, and that the tithes should continue subject to it during the life of A., and the feme married and died, and the husband, who took the term by survivorship, renewed at his own expense, Sir W. Grant determined that the annuitant was not to be called upon to contribute, for that would be to make him pay the consideration twice, and he said the case of Maxwell v. Ashe was decisive. On the other hand, it was ruled by Lord Manners, in the case of a will, that the annuitant must contribute in proportion to his interest in the property; for though the testator had given no direction upon this point, it was incident to this sort of tenure (a). At the time of this decision, his Lordship was not aware of the cases before Sir J. Strange and Sir W. Grant; but on a subsequent occasion, when the same point again arose before him, he adhered to the same opinion, notwithstanding those authorities, for "all the legatees," he said, "appear to have been equally the objects of the testator's favour. Could it have been his intention that one of them alone should bear the expense of the renewal, and that the others should receive the full amount of their annuities without any deduction?" (b)

Terms of assignment by the trustee.

13. In making the assignment to the cestui que trust the trustee will also be indemnified against the personal covenants which he entered into with the lessor (c); and on his own part must clear the lease of all incumbrances created by himself, except underleases at rack-rent (d).

Accounting for mesne rents and profits.

14. The trustee must also account to the cestui que trust for the mesne rents and profits which he has received from the estate (e), and also for any sub-fines that may have been paid to him by underlessees (f). And the cestui que trust, though the lease which was the ground of his equity has since actually expired, may still call for an account of the rents and profits (g). In the case of a renewal by tenant for life, the account will of course be restricted to the period since the tenant for life's decease (h).

Remedy against purchasers and others claiming under the lessee.

15. The cestui que trust may pursue his remedy not only against the original trustee, executor, or tenant for life, and volunteers claiming through them (i); but also against a purchaser, with notice express or implied of the plaintiff's title (j); and a purchaser will be deemed to have had notice if the lease assigned to him recited the surrender of a former lease which recited the surrender of a previous lease, in which mention was made of the settlement under which the cestui que trust claims (a); and the volunteer or purchaser with notice will not be helped by a fine levied (b), or even by a release from the cestui que trust, if executed by him while in ignorance of the facts of the case (c). However, a purchaser will stand in the place of his assignor in respect of any allowances for expenses incurred in the renewal (d).

Limitation of time.

16. A cestui que trust will be barred of his remedy if he be guilty of long acquiescence, as, in one case, for a period of fifteen years (e); and in another case concerning a lease of mines (which stand on a peculiar footing), relief was refused after a period of nine years (f), and continual claim by the cestui que trust, if without any effective step to enforce the right, will be of no avail (g).

Case of trustee of a lease purchasing the reversion.

17. If the trustee of a lease become the purchaser of the reversion Sir W. Grant said, that, as he thereby intercepts and cuts off the chance of future renewals, and consequently makes use of his situation to prejudice the interests of those who stand behind him, there might be some sort of equity in a claim to have the reversion considered as a substitution for those interests, but his Honour was not aware of any determination to that effect (h). [However it has recently been held in a case in Ireland that a trustee of leaseholds customarily renewable, who purchased the reversion at a sale by auction was a constructive trustee for the persons beneficially interested in the leaseholds (i); and in another recent case where the assignee of the tenant for life of leaseholds which had been customarily renewable, but which the Ecclesiastical Commissioners had refused to renew any more, purchased the reversion, it was held that he had become a trustee of the reversion for the benefit of the persons interested in the lease subject to his right to be recouped the purchase-money paid by him (j).

No tenant-right where a corporation has sold to an individual.

But where a lease had been held by a trustee as tenant of a college, and the college having disposed of the reversion to a stranger, the trustee purchased of the alienee, Sir W. Grant decided that the parties interested in the original lease had no equity against the trustee, for the tenant-right of renewal with a public body was gone, and the lease at a rack-rent was all that could be expected from a private proprietor (a).

But if the trustee of a lease with a covenant for perpetual renewal, or if any person standing in a fiduciary position in respect of such a lease acquires the legal possession of and dominion over the fee which is subject to the covenant, and so deals with the property as to make the renewal impossible by his own act and for his own benefit, he is bound to give full effect to the charges on the trust estate, and to satisfy those charges out of the acquired estate (b).

Factor, agent, &c., constructive trustees.

18. The principle upon which a Court of equity elicits constructive trusts might be pursued into numerous other instances; as if a factor (c), agent (d), partner (e), inspector under a creditors' deed (f), or other confidential person, acquire any pecuniary advantage to himself through the medium of his fiduciary character, he is accountable as a constructive trustee for those profits to his employer or other person whose interest he was bound to advance; [but until some judgment or decree has been obtained the money cannot be said to be the money of the principal (g).]

Unauthorized fall of timber.

19. Again, a constructive trust may arise under special instances in respect of waste. If a tenant for life commit legal waste by felling timber, the tenant of the first estate of inheritance at the time (though there be an intermediate life estate [and though there be a possibility of intermediate estates of inheritance coming into esse (h)]) can recover the trees or damages (i), for even an intermediate tenant for life, though he be unimpeachable of waste, cannot claim the timber against the owner of the inheritance (a); and if the tenant for life commit equitable waste, the rule is the same, and the timber belongs to the owner of the first estate of inheritance, notwithstanding intermediate estates for life (b); and the wrongdoer is accountable for the proceeds, with interest at 4 per cent. (c), without being allowed for repairs (d); but subject to the bar of the statute of limitations which begins to run from the time of the waste (e). It may happen, however, that the wrongdoer is himself, at the time, the owner of the first estate of inheritance, while intermediate estates of inheritance may arise in future; as in a limitation to A. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to A. in fee, and no issue of A. or B. are born at the time of commission of the waste. In this case, as no man shall take advantage of his own wrong, and there is no estate of inheritance in esse except that of A. himself, he is constructively a trustee in equity of the proceeds of the timber for the benefit of all the persons interested under the settlement, except himself, according to their respective estates, that is, he is made to account for the proceeds which are invested and deemed part of the settlement, and the income of such investment is payable to the tenant in præsenti, not being the wrongdoer, whether such tenant be for life or otherwise, and if there be no such tenant it accumulates. But if in the case put there be no issue afterwards born of A. or B., and therefore there is no inheritance but that of A., the fund subject to B.'s life estate will belong to A. (f). In the above case, A. himself had

(f) Williams v. Bolton, 1 Cox, 72; Powlett v. Bolton, 3 Ves. 374; see further statement of this case in 2 New Rep. 305. But in Garth v. Cotton, 3 Atk. 751; 1 Ves. sen. 523, 546, interest at 4 per cent. was given only from the filing of the bill; and in Duke of Leeds v. Amherst, 12 Sim. 476; 2 Ph. 117, interest at 4 per cent. was given only from the death of the wrongdoer. In the later case of Bagot v. Bagot, 32 Beav. 509, M. R. refused interest further back than from the death of the wrongdoer. The decision was appealed from to L. C. (Lord Westbury), and the case was compro-

the first vested estate of inheritance; but it may happen that the first vested estate of inheritance is in B., and that A. and B. collude together in cutting the timber, and then a court of equity equally interferes and makes A. and B. accountable as constructive trustees of the proceeds for the benefit of the other persons interested in the estate, including tenants for life (a). Where there is collusion between the tenant for life and the owner of the first estate of inheritance, or where the tenant for life is also owner of the first estate of inheritance, and the timber is improperly cut, the remedy of the next tenant for life in remainder, is said to be barred by the statute after six years from the death of the prior tenant for life (b). These principles which have been mised, but in the course of the argument L. C. intimated his concurrence with the view of M. R. as to the time whence interest was to be computed. The L. C. seemed also to think that, as to such timber felled by the tenant for life as the Court upon application to it would have ordered to be cut, the tenant for life would be protected as having done a proper act, but that the onus would lie upon him to establish such a case. "As regards the question of interest on the money arising from timber properly cut, the plaintiff," he said, "could hardly ask for interest. Of course the obligation of making out the case lies upon the tenant for life."—M.S. However this may be as to the timber properly cut, the remark suggests itself as to the timber improperly cut, that if the tenant for life is not to pay interest from the time of felling, he takes advantage of his own wrong, for if the timber had been left standing the increase of growth would have enured to the benefit of the remainderman, but by cutting the timber the tenant for life intercepts this accretion and enjoys the usufruct himself. True he loses the mast and shade, but that is the result of his own wilful act, and he cannot therefore complain. [And if it be said that the tenant for life would get the advantage of the increase of growth, and that this is represented by the interest, the answer is that such advantage is of an uncertain character, while the advantage of receipt of the interest is certain and definite.] As regards mines, the case is different, for here there is no continuing growth for the benefit of the remainderman. But in one respect the offence of waste is greater, for if timber be cut other timber may grow in its place, but when minerals are abstracted the vacuum remains for ever. On the subject of timber generally, see the work of the late Mr. Craig, Q.C.

Where the timber is properly cut, either by order of the Court or by a wise exercise of the discretion of the trustees, the proceeds are treated as part of the settlement, and are invested for the benefit of all persons interested, whether tenants for life or otherwise, and whether impeachable for waste or not, according to their respective estates. Waldo v. Waldo, 12 Sim. 107; Wickham v. Wickham, 19 Ves. 419; Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; Mildmay v. Mildmay, 4 B. And if there be a tenant for life unimpeachable of waste, whose estate comes into possession, as he might have cut the timber, he is held to be entitled absolutely to the fund; Waldo v. Waldo, 12 Sim. 107; Phillips v. Barlow, 14 Sim. 262; Gent v. Harrison, Johns. 517; [Lowndes v. Norton, 6 Ch. D. 139. And an equitable tenant for life unimpeachable for waste is entitled to the proceeds of ornamental timber cut by him where the timber so cut is such as the Court would itself direct to be cut for the preservation and improvement of the remaining ornamental timber; but it does not follow that the Court will not at the instance of laid down as to timber apply also mutatis mutandis to waste in opening mines (a). Mines.

By a recent Act, 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25, subs. 3, "an estate for life without impeachment of waste shall not confer or be deemed to have conferred upon the tenant for life, any legal right to commit waste of the description known as equitable waste, unless an intention to confer such right shall expressly appear by the instrument creating such estate." 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, s. 25.

[20. By the Settled Land Act, 1882, a tenant for life though impeachable for waste may with the consent of the trustees of the settlement or an order of the Court cut timber ripe and fit for cutting, and is entitled to one-fourth of the net proceeds (b), and the same Act gives the tenant for life power to lease unopened mines, setting aside a portion of the profits for the benefit of the remaindermen (c).] [Settled Land Act, 1882.]

21. As another instance of a constructive trust, where money is paid to a tenant for life in consideration of his not opposing a bill in parliament for sanctioning a railway, he is constructively a trustee of the money for all the persons interested under the settlement (d). Bonus for not opposing a bill in Parliament.

[22. So where one of the trustees of a lucrative agency agreement procured the agency to be renewed to a firm, in which he was a partner, upon terms less lucrative but still beneficial, it was held that the trustee's interest in the renewed agreement formed part of the trust estate (e).] [Renewal of agency agreement.]

its professors, it was held that the grant of the fishings having been made to the Town Council as the proprietors of the lands, they were constructive trustees of the fishings for the University and its professors (a).

[Mortgagee.] 24. A mortgagee is not a constructive trustee for the mortgagor of his power of sale, which is a power given to him for his own benefit, to enable him the better to realize his debt (b). But after he has exercised the power and paid himself his debt and costs he is accountable as a trustee for the surplus proceeds of sale, and may be charged with interest thereon (c).]

Mortgagee in possession. 25. A mortgagee in possession is constructively a trustee of the rents and profits, and bound to apply them in a due course of administration (d), and it has been held (e) that a mortgagee in possession is so strictly a trustee, that he is liable even after a transfer for the rents and profits subsequently accrued, but [the liability will not continue when the transfer is made by the direction of the Court in a redemption action (f).]

Fraud or negligence in attorney. 26. Again, where A. contracted for the sale of part of his estate, and the purchaser requiring a fine to be levied, B., who was A.'s attorney, and also his heir-apparent, advised a fine to be levied of the whole estate, whereby the will of the vendor was revoked, and the part not included in the sale descended to B. as his heir-at-law, it was held that the devisee under the will could call upon B. as a constructive trustee (g). [(f) Hall v. Heward, 32 Ch. Div. 430. In the last edition of this work the existence of the liability in any case was doubted, and it was suggested that Venables v. Foyle was probably decided upon its own special circumstances, for a mortgagee, it was said, has surely a right to transfer his mortgage without notice to the mortgagor, though in the latter case he may not be allowed the costs of the transfer (see Re Radcliffe, 22 Beav. 201), and, if he be entitled to transfer, how can he be held responsible as for a breach of trust? (See Kingham v. Lee, 15 Sim. 400). But in Hall v. Heward, both Cotton and Lopes, L.JJ., treated the liability as existing where the transfer is made voluntarily. It is singular that there is no modern case directly in point, but the liability of the mortgagee may be supported on the ground that by entering into possession he has made himself a trustee for the mortgagor of the rents and profits, and that the transfer without the consent of the mortgagor merely constitutes the transferee to be the agent of the mortgagee for the receipt of the rents and profits, and leaves the mortgagee liable for the acts of his agent; and see Coote on Mortgages, 5th ed., 720, 809; Fisher on Mortgages, 4th ed., 854; Hall v. Heward, sup.]

Agent not constructive trustee.

27. An agent employed by a trustee is accountable in general to his principal only, and cannot as a constructive trustee be made responsible to the cestuis que trust (b); [and the directors of a company which is bound by a trust will not be personally liable for breaches of trust committed by the company (c).] But of course the rule does not apply where the agent has taken an actively fraudulent part, and so made himself a principal (d). [And, where trust moneys come into the custody and control of a firm of solicitors with notice of the trusts upon which the moneys are held, it lies with the firm to discharge themselves by shewing that the moneys were applied in accordance with the trusts (e).]

Title-deeds.

28. Under the head of constructive trusts may be mentioned the case of a settlement left in the hands of a person taking only a partial benefit under it as a tenant for life, in which case the other persons interested and claiming under the same title have a right to the fair use of the document, and the holder is deemed a trustee for them, and is bound to produce it at their request (f).

And in one case it was ruled that if a person sell part of his estate and retain the title-deeds, though he may not have given a covenant for production, he is compellable to produce them as common property to the purchaser (a). But in Barclay v. Raine (b), Sir J. Leach seems to have doubted whether, if part be sold and the title-deeds delivered to the purchaser, a future purchaser from him could be ordered, where there was no covenant for that purpose, to produce them to the owners of the other parts. The real property commissioners, however, observe, that previously to this case it had been supposed, either that an original independent equity existed entitling any party interested in a deed to call for its production by any other person having the custody of it, or at least that such an equity existed wherever the parties requiring the production claimed under a person who had taken the precaution to procure a covenant for that purpose, and the person having the actual custody of it derived that custody from or through a person who had entered into such covenant (c); upon which Lord St. Leonards observes, that the rule in equity was never so universal as it is quoted in the first part of the above statement, but that the second branch, stating what at least the doctrine was, appears to be correct (d). It is submitted that even where a vendor has taken no such covenant from the purchaser, the vendor, and those claiming under him, would have a right to production of the deeds as common property.

Constructive trustees from notice of the trust.

29. Constructive trusts are said also to arise where the trust estate is converted by the trustee from one species of property into another; and again, where the trust estate passes from the trustee into the hands of a volunteer whether with or without notice, or of a purchaser for valuable consideration with notice; but as these are cases rather of an existing trust continued and kept on foot than of a new trust created, the consideration of these topics will be reserved to a subsequent part of the treatise.

In concluding the subject of trusts by operation of law, it may be proper to offer a few remarks on the wording of the Statute of Frauds (e).

(c) 3rd Rep.

(e) 29 Car. 2, c. 3.

By the eighth section it is enacted, that "where any conveyance shall be made of any lands or tenements by which a trust or confidence shall or may arise or result by the implication or construction of law, or be transferred or extinguished by an act or operation of law, then and in every such case such trust or confidence shall be of the like force and effect as the same would have been if that statute had not been made; anything hereinbefore contained to the contrary notwithstanding." Statute of Frauds as affecting trusts by operation of law.

Lord Hardwicke upon this clause observed, "I am now bound down by the Statute of Frauds to construe nothing a resulting trust but what are there called trusts by operation of law; and what are those? Why, First, when an estate is purchased in the name of one person but the money or consideration is given by another; or, Secondly, where a trust is declared only as to part, and nothing said as to the rest, in which case what remains undisposed of will result to the heir-at-law. I do not know any other instance besides these two, where the Court has declared resulting trusts by operation of law, unless in cases of fraud, and where transactions have been carried on malâ fide" (a). Lord Hardwicke's opinion.

Upon this opinion of Lord Hardwicke, Mr. Fonblanque has made the following just remarks:—"This construction of a clause of the Statute of Frauds restrains it to such trusts as arise by operation of law, whereas it clearly extends to such as are raised by construction of Courts of equity; as, in the case of an executor or guardian renewing a lease, though with his own money, such renewal shall be deemed to be in trust for the person beneficially interested in the old lease. It is also observable, that the first instance stated by his Lordship of a resulting trust is not so qualified as to let in the exceptions to which the general rule is subject, and the second instance is only applicable to a will, whereas the doctrine of resulting trusts is also applicable to conveyances" (b). As to the latter part of this criticism it may be observed that while Atkyns makes Lord Hardwicke speak of a will only, Barnardiston, the other reporter, applies his Lordship's observation to a conveyance (c). It would thus appear that Lord Hardwicke in fact extended his remark to a will and a conveyance indifferently. Mr. Fonblanque's opinion.

Both Lord Hardwicke and Mr. Fonblanque assume that the seventh or enacting clause embraces all trusts indiscriminately, and that such as arise by operation of law are only saved from the Act by virtue of the subsequent exception contained in the eighth section; but the language of the latter clause, that "where any conveyance shall be made of any lands or tenements by which a trust or confidence shall or may arise or result," &c., seems to have escaped observation; for, unless conveyance be taken with great violence to the meaning of the words to include a devise, it is clear that trusts resulting under a will are not reached by the terms of the saving. Nor is it easy to suppose that the legislature could mean to include a devise; for the fifth and sixth sections relate exclusively to devises, and, had it fallen within the scope of the Act to extend the eighth section to wills, it can scarcely be conceived that the proper and technical word should not necessarily have suggested itself. The question then arises, If resulting trusts upon a will are not saved by the exception, how are they not affected by force of the previous enactment? As the statute was directed against frauds and perjuries, it is obvious that resulting trusts were not within the mischief intended to be remedied. The aim of the legislature was, not to disturb such trusts as were raised by maxims of equity, and so could not open a door to fraud or perjury, but, by requiring the creation of trusts by parties to be manifested in writing, to prevent that fraud and perjury to which the admission of parol testimony had hitherto given occasion. And the enactment itself is applicable only to this view of the subject; for the legislature could scarcely direct that "all declarations or creations of trusts should be manifested and proved," &c., unless the trusts were in their nature capable of manifestation and proof; but, as resulting trusts are the effect of a rule of law, to prove them would be to instruct the Court in its own principles, to certify to the judge how equity itself operates. The exception could only have been inserted ex majore cautelâ that the extent of the enactment might not be left to implication. But why, it will be asked, are resulting trusts upon conveyances excepted, and not resulting trusts upon wills? The only explanation that suggests itself is this:—The statute had spoken only of declarations or creations of trusts, and by a will no resulting trust is or can be declared or created. If lands be devised to A. and his heirs upon trust to pay the testator's debts, the resulting trust of the surplus is no new declaration or creation; the right construction is, that the testator has disposed of the legal estate to the devisee, and of part of the equitable in favour of creditors; but the residue of the equitable, though said to result, has in fact never been parted with, but descends upon the heir-at-law as part of the original inheritance. In conveyances, however, this is not equally the case; for if a purchase be taken in the name of a third person, a trust which had no previous existence arises upon the property in favour of the real purchaser; and so if a lease be renewed by a trustee, the equity which was annexed to the old term immediately fastens upon the new. Here, then, it is evident there is an actual creation of trust; and, to obviate all doubts as to the operation of the enactment, resulting trusts arising out of conveyances are expressly excepted.

(c) Lloyd v. Spillet, Barn. 388.

PART II.

THE TRUSTEE.

CHAPTER XI.

OF DISCLAIMER AND ACCEPTANCE OF THE TRUST.

HAVING treated of the creation of trusts, whether by the act of a party or by operation of law, we shall next direct our attention to the estate and office of the trustee, and, as a preliminary inquiry, we propose in the present chapter to offer a few remarks upon the subject of the trustee's disclaimer or acceptance of the trust.

First. Of Disclaimer.

No person compellable to be a trustee.

1. It may be laid down as a clear and undisputed rule, that no one is compellable to undertake a trust (a). "Though a person," said Lord Redesdale, "may have agreed in the lifetime of a testator to accept the executorship, he is still at liberty to recede, except so far as his feelings may forbid it; and it will be proper for him to do so, if he finds that his charge as executor is different from what he conceived it to be when he entered into the engagement" (b).

Heir of a trustee.

2. But there does not appear to be any instance in which, after acceptance by the trustee, his heir has been allowed to disclaim the estate; and if the law permitted it, many instances would no doubt have occurred (c). The inconveniences of such a right of disclaimer would [before the recent Act (d) have been] great, as the legal estate would then [have] become vested in the Crown. However, where the heir took not strictly in that character, but as special occupant, he might have exercised his discretion in refusing or accepting the estate (a).

Disclaimer should be without delay.

3. If the party named as trustee intend to decline the administration of the trust, he ought to execute a disclaimer without delay. There is no rule, however, that a trustee must execute a disclaimer within any particular time. Thus it will operate after an interval of sixteen years, if the interval can be so explained as to rebut the presumption of his having accepted the trust (b). If a person know of the trust and lie by for a long period, it is for a jury, or the Court sitting as a jury, to say whether such acquiescence was not because he had assented to the office (c).

Form of the disclaimer.

4. The disclaimer should be by deed, for a deed is clear evidence and admits of no ambiguity (d); and the instrument should be a disclaimer and not a conveyance, for the latter, as it transmits the estate, has been held to imply a previous acceptance of the office (e); for a person cannot be allowed to disclaim the office and accept the estate (f). However Lord Eldon expressed his opinion, which seems the common-sense view, that where the intention is disclaimer, the instrument ought to receive that construction, though it be a conveyance in form (g).

Can a person accept a bounty and repudiate a trust under the same will?

5. If a person be nominated a trustee in a will and also take a benefit under it, he can claim the testator's bounty, and yet disclaim the onus of the trust (h); for an executor, who is also a legatee, may renounce probate and yet claim the legacy, and it is difficult to point out a distinction between the two cases. But if the benefit be annexed to the office of trustee or executor, and he does not act, he cannot claim the benefit (i).

Opinion of counsel as to disclaimer.

6. If one be named as trustee without any authority from himself, he is justified (as between himself and the parties interested in the trust who require a disclaimer from him and thereby undertake to pay all proper costs), in taking the opinion of counsel upon the propriety of executing a deed of disclaimer (a).

Disclaimer of trust by statement of defence.

7. A trust may be disclaimed at the bar of the Court (b), or by [a statement of defence,] and the person named as trustee will, like any other person made a party to the suit unnecessarily, be entitled to his costs (c); (but only as between party and party (d);) though the action which might have been dismissed against him at an earlier stage be brought to a hearing (e); and if his [statement] be needlessly long, he will only be allowed what would have been the reasonable costs of a simple disclaimer (f).

May be shown by acts.

8. A trust may also be repudiated on the evidence of conduct without any express declaration of disclaimer (g); and conduct by a devisee in trust which amounts to a disclaimer of the office of trustee will also amount to a disclaimer of the legal estate (h); but a person would act very imprudently, who allowed so important a question as whether he is a trustee or not to remain matter of construction.

After disclaimer, the trustee may act as agent to the trust.

9. After renunciation of the trust, whether by express disclaimer, or by conduct which is tantamount to it, a trustee may assist as agent, or act under a letter of attorney, in the management of the estate without incurring responsibility (i); but the caution need scarcely be suggested, that all such interference cannot be too scrupulously avoided before the fact of the renunciation of the trust has been most unquestionably established; and where the person named as trustee is to receive a profit from his agency, this naturally excites a suspicion in the mind of the Court (j).

How estate divested from the trustee.

10. On a grant or other conveyance to a trustee, though upon onerous trusts, the estate passes to him without any express assent but subject to the right of dissenting (a), and what will amount to a disclaimer at law, so as to divest the estate, may be a distinct question from the disclaimer of the office in equity.

Freeholds may be disclaimed by deed.

It was formerly held (at least such was the clear opinion of Lord Coke), that a freehold, whether vested in a person by feoffment, grant (b), or devise (c), could not be disclaimed but by matter of record; and the reason upon which this maxim was founded, was that the suitor might be more certainly apprised who was the tenant to the præcipe (d). But the doctrine of modern times is, that disclaimer by matter of record is unnecessary (e); for, as Lord Tenterden observed, there can be no disclaimer by a person in a court of record, unless some other person think fit to cite him there to receive his disclaimer, and if the estate be damnosa hæreditas, that is not very likely to happen (f). It has been lately held that the estate may be devested by the disclaimer of the trustee in chancery, though appearing only as a respondent upon a petition (g); and Mr. Justice Holroyd laid it down generally that a party might disclaim a freehold not only by deed but by parol (h); and the doctrine has since been sanctioned by actual decision (i).

Disclaimer of uses.

11. It was laid down in Butler and Baker's case, that estates limited under the statute of uses were to be disclaimed with the same formalities as estates at common law (j); but Lord Eldon doubted whether a party could disclaim in the case of a conveyance to uses, except by release with intent of disclaimer: however, his Lordship added, he was aware that such a doctrine would shake titles innumerable (k).

Disclaimer of chattels.

12. It seems to be clearly established, that a disclaimer by parol declaration will suffice to divest the legal estate, where the trust property is a mere chattel interest (a).

Disclaimer by feme covert.

13. Whether a feme covert could, under the Fines and Recoveries Act, disclaim an interest in real estate, was, by the terms of the statute, left doubtful; the Act enabling her only to "dispose of, release, surrender, or extinguish," any estate or power as if she were a feme sole (b). In the Irish Act, 4 & 5 W. 4. c. 92, s. 68, the word "disclaim" was expressly introduced. And now, by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 7, a married woman is enabled, in like manner, to "disclaim" any estate or interest in lands in England. But the disclaimer must be by deed, and the husband must concur, and the feme covert must make the statutory acknowledgment. [Whether under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (c), a married woman can disclaim, is also doubtful; and it will be prudent, in all cases coming within 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 7, to comply with the formalities required by that Act.]

Effect of disclaimer.

14. The effect of disclaimer by a trustee, where there is a co-trustee, is to vest the whole legal estate in the co-trustee (d): and, as regards the exercise of the office, even if the trust be accompanied with a power, the continuing trustee may administer the trust without the concurrence of the trustee who has chosen to disclaim, and without the appointment of a new trustee (e). The settlor, it is said, must be presumed to know what the legal consequence of the death or disclaimer of one of the trustees would be (f). And when the disclaimer has been executed, it operates retrospectively, and makes the other trustee the sole trustee ab initio (g).

Disclaimer of personal contracts.

15. But in personal contracts the rule is different, for where A. covenants with B., C., and D. as trustees, and B. disclaims, C. and D. do not take the joint covenant, and cannot sue without B. (h).

16. If trustees are appointed protectors of the settlement, and they intend to disclaim the protectorship, the deed of disclaimer must, by the Fines and Recoveries Act, be enrolled in Chancery (a). Disclaimer of protectorship.

Secondly. Of Acceptance.

1. A trustee may accept the office either by signing the trust deed (b), or by an express declaration of his assent (c), or by proceeding to act in the execution of the duties of the trust. How trust accepted.

2. Where a trustee, with notice of his appointment as trustee, has done nothing, but has not disclaimed, it will be presumed after a long lapse of time, as twenty years (d), and à fortiori, after thirty-four years (e), that he accepted the trust (f). And even where the deed was only four years old, Lord St. Leonards observed, "that where an estate was vested in trustees who knew of their appointment and did not object at the time, they would not be allowed afterwards to say they did not assent to the conveyance, and it would require some strong act to induce the Court to hold that in such a case the estate was divested. He spoke with respect to the effect upon third parties; every Court and every jury would presume an assent" (g). Presumption of acceptance.

3. If the trustee execute the deed, he should see that the recitals are correct; or the Court may hold him liable for the consequences. However, in a late case (h), where it was recited in a marriage settlement that the lady was possessed of a sum of stock, which subsequently was not forthcoming, Lord Langdale said there were so many instances of parties representing that they were entitled to particular property, which representation afterwards turned out to be wholly untrue, that it would be unjust and dangerous to bind third parties by such representations; and that he did not therefore accede to the argument, that the recital alone bound the trustees. And in another case where a release from the cestuis que trust to the trustees stated that the legacy duty amounted only to Recitals.

Rep. 251; Story v. Gape, 2 Jur. N. S. 706; Westmoreland v. Holland, 23 L. T. N.S. 797; 19 W. R. 302, affirmed W. N. 1871, p. 124.

£19 8s., whereas it was much more, Lord Romilly said it was a mistake of all parties, and that the trustees were not estopped by it in equity (a).

Of acceptance by acting in the trust.

4. What acts of a person nominated as trustee will amount to a constructive acceptance of the office, is a question constantly arising, and not easily to be determined by any general rule.

Effect of probate.

5. If a person named as executor, takes out probate of the will, he thereby constitutes himself executor, and incurs all the liabilities annexed to the executorship (b). The renunciation of probate by a person named as executor and trustee is not in itself a disclaimer of the trust, but it is one circumstance of evidence, and if there be no proof of his ever having acted, the Court after a long lapse of time, as sixty years, will presume a disclaimer (c); [and where the trusts of the real and personal estate were combined, being trusts for sale and conversion, and application of the proceeds as a mixed fund in (inter alia) paying debts, legacies, and funeral expenses, and the same persons were appointed executors and trustees, and the only executor and trustee who survived the testator renounced probate, the late M.R. held that there was conclusive evidence of a disclaimer, as the trustee, after renouncing execution of the will as to the personal estate, could not carry out the trusts as to the payment of the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and could not get rid of a part of his trust in that way, but must have intended to disclaim all the trusts (d).]

Executor of an executor.

6. If an executor of an executor take upon himself the administration of the goods of the first testator, he thereby accepts the administration of the goods of the latter; for it is only through the medium of the latter testator that he can reach the executorship of the former. It was at one time thought that an executor might renounce probate of the will of the original testator, and at the same time or subsequently prove the will of the immediate testator (e), but the practice has now been settled to the contrary (f). But if the first executor never proved the will, the chain of representation is not continued (g).

(g) 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 16.

7. Any voluntary interference with the assets, whether with or without probate, will stamp a person as acting executor. Thus, where of four executors only one proved, and the other three, describing themselves as executors, gave a letter of attorney to the fourth, describing him as acting executor, to receive a quantity of stock, Lord Hardwicke ruled that the whole number, by this conduct, had drawn upon themselves the burden of the executorship (a); and so generally, if an executor sign a power of attorney to get in part of the testator's estate (b), he brings down the whole burden upon himself, though at the time of acting he disclaim the intention of assuming the office (c).

Voluntary interference with assets is acceptance of the executorship.

The joining in an assignment of the testator's lease (d), or the bringing an action on the footing of the trust (e), is an acceptance of the office. And an executor and trustee for sale will be deemed to have acted in the trust, if the property be expressed to be sold by direction of the trustees, and he is present, and takes part, and exercises authority or ownership by giving orders respecting the sale, and afterwards calls on a co-executor to inquire into the state of the testator's accounts (f).

Acts of acceptance.

8. The rule that every voluntary interference with the subject-matter will convert a person into a trustee, must be taken with this qualification, that the interference is not such as to be plainly referable to some other ground than the part execution of the trust (g).

Interference not acceptance, where clearly referable to another ground than acceptance.

Lord Camden, notwithstanding these circumstances, observed in his argument, that "B. undertook to act solely, and did act solely until he died," implying that A. had, by his conduct, not assumed the character of executor. But the case was one of "cruel persecution" against A.; and his Lordship put the fairest possible construction upon all that A. had done; and besides, Lord Camden might only have meant that B. was substantially the sole acting executor, without adverting to the question, whether the interference of A. ought or not, in strict legal construction, to be held an acceptance of the executorship.

Trustee may not act ambiguously, and then disclaim.

9. If a trustee act ambiguously he cannot afterwards take advantage of the doubt, and say he acted not as trustee, but in some other character (a).

Case of executorship clothed with a trust.

10. If the office of executor be, by the will, clothed with certain trusts, a person named as executor who proves the will and thereby makes himself executor, is held to draw upon himself the obligations knit to the office of trustee. Thus, if a testator direct that his executors shall get in certain outstanding effects to be applied to a particular purpose, a person cannot make himself executor by proving the will, and refuse the trust (b).

Where the executor is also named as devisee upon trust.

11. And if an executor be also designated trustee of the real estate, and he acts as executor, he is deemed to have accepted the entire trusteeship (c).

Two trusts in same instrument.

12. And if a person, by the same instrument, be nominated trustee of two distinct trusts, he cannot divide them: but if he accept the one, he will be taken to have accepted the other (d). However, these are the doctrines in a court of equity only, for at law an executor may accept that office and yet disclaim the devise to him of a legal estate (e).

Taking custody of trust-deed not an acceptance of trust.

13. Where a person was named as a trustee in a settlement, but he did not execute it, and declined to act, he was held not to have accepted the trust by merely taking the settlement into his custody until a trustee could be found (f).

Devisee of several trust estates.

14. If [in a case not falling within the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (g)] a trustee of two distinct settlements, created at different times and wholly independent of each other, devise all his trust estates to the same person, can such person accept one estate and disclaim the other? It would probably be held that he might; but he should lose no time in manifesting his intention; for, should he act as owner of one estate and not expressly disclaim the other, the law would presume him to have accepted both.

Position of administrator where executor and trustee renounces.

15. If A. be named as executor and trustee, and he renounces probate and disclaims the trust, and B. takes out letters of administration with the will annexed; B., though he thus becomes the personal representative, is not also the trustee of the will, nor is he a trustee in any sense, except as holding the surplus assets after the ordinary administration, with notice of a trust. A proper trustee can only be appointed by the Court (a).

Executor converting himself into a trustee.

16. Where a fund is given to a person upon certain trusts, and he is appointed executor, as soon as he has severed the legacy from the general assets, and appropriated it to the specific purpose, he dismisses the character of executor, and assumes that of trustee (b). [But an executor by merely assenting to a legacy, as by signing a residuary account, does not constitute himself a trustee (c).] But the assent of the executor to a legacy to himself in trust, however proved, converts him into a trustee (d).

Parol evidence.

17. Upon the question of acceptance or non-acceptance of the office, parol evidence is of course admissible as on any other issue (e).

One nominated a trustee may sue as such without written acceptance.

18. If a person be asked and consent to become a trustee of a marriage settlement, and thereupon his name is introduced into articles as the basis of the settlement, he may sue the parties bound by the articles for specific performance, though he may not have executed any written instrument declaratory of his acceptance of the trust (f).

Of acceptance under hand and seal.

19. With respect to the liability of the trustee, it is perfectly immaterial to him whether he declare his acceptance of the office by deed or parol, or his consent be implied from his acts, for in each case the obligations imposed upon him are precisely the same (g). In the event of a breach of trust, the consequences to the parties beneficially interested admitted until recent enactments of a slight variation. A breach of trust creates per se a simple contract debt only (h); but, if the trustee has covenanted under his hand and seal to execute the trust, even though the heirs be not named, the breach of trust, thus becoming a specialty debt, would, as respects legal assets, and as to the estates of testators or intestates who died before January, 1870, take precedence of simple contract debts (a). However, the mere fact of a trustee being made a party to and executing a deed appointing him to that office, does not of itself amount to a covenant on his part to execute the trusts, if the deed do not contain any words which could be construed a covenant at law (b); and if the deed do contain such words, yet the trustee cannot be sued upon covenant if he did not execute the deed; though, of course, after accepting the trust he would be liable for a breach of contract, as for a simple contract debt (c). If he execute the deed, it is not necessary, in order to make it a covenant, that there should be the word covenant, but the words agree and declare (d), or the word declare alone will suffice (e). There is no magic in words, and it is simply a question of intention whether the execution of the deed was for the purpose of creating a specialty debt or alio intuitu (f). In the case of a trustee covenanting for himself and his heirs, a remedy lay at common law against the heir in respect of estates descended; and by 3 W. & M. c. 14, the like remedy was given against the devisee of the debtor: but this was only where the specialty would have supported an action of debt, as in the case of a bond, and did not apply to a covenant, by which, not a debt, was created, but damages were recoverable (g); but 11 G. 4. & 1 W. 4. c. 47, perfected the remedy by extending it to the case of a covenant [or other specialty (h). By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, unless a contrary intention is expressed, a covenant and a contract under seal, and a bond or obligation under seal, made, or implied by virtue of the Act, since the 31st December, 1881, though not expressed to bind the heirs, operate in law to bind the heirs and real estate, as well as the executors and administrators, and personal estate, as if heirs were expressed (a). The effect of this section seems to be to extend the remedy given by 11 G. 4. & 1 W. 4. c. 47, to all specialty creditors, whether the heirs are named or not. By 3 & 4. W. 4. c. 104 it was] declared that the lands of a debtor should be liable to all his debts, whether on simple contract or on specialty; but specialties, where the heir was bound, were still made to take precedence of simple contract debts, and specialties where the heir was not bound. A subsequent statute (b) has now abolished the distinction between simple contract debts and specialty debts, and directed all debts to be paid pari passu in the administration of estates of testators or intestates who may have died on or after the 1st January, 1870.

Duties consequent on acceptance.

20. As soon as a trustee has accepted the office, he must bear in mind that he is not to sleep upon it, but is required to take an active part in the execution of the trust. The law knows no such person as a passive trustee. If, therefore, an unprofessional person be associated in the trust with a professional one, he must not argue, as is often done, that because the solicitor is better acquainted with business and with legal technicalities, the administration of the trust may be safely confided to him, and that the other need not interfere except by joining in what are called formal acts. If he sign a power of attorney for sale of stock, or execute a deed of reconveyance on repayment of a mortgage sum, he is as answerable for the money as if he were himself the solicitor and had the sole management of the transaction.

A trustee on acceptance must inform himself of the state of the trust.

21. Again, when a trustee has entered upon the trust, he is bound at once to acquaint himself with the nature and particular circumstances of the property, and to take such steps as may be necessary for the due protection of it (c). Thus he is not liable for the defaults of any predecessor in the trust, but if the fund is in danger and not in the state in which it ought to be, the Court will presume him to have made proper inquiries, and will

(b) 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46.

[(c) A trustee who brings an action for the protection of the trust property under the advice of counsel, is not absolutely indemnified by such advice from liability to the costs of the action as between himself and his cestuis que trust, though such advice would go a long way to justify the proceedings, if instituted bonâ fide: Stott v. Milne, 25 Ch. Div. 710.]

hold him responsible if he does not take such measures as may be called for (a).

Covenant to settle future property.

22. But where a person was appointed new trustee of a marriage settlement, which contained a covenant by the husband for the settlement of the wife's future property, it was held that he was entitled to assume that the covenant had been duly performed up to the time of his becoming trustee, if he had no reason to suspect the contrary (b).

Inventory.

23. A trustee of chattels personal for the separate use of a wife must take care, on accepting the trust, to have the effects ascertained by a proper inventory, or in a suit for an account of the trust estate he may be deprived of his costs (c). [And where a tenant for life of chattels is let into possession he should sign an inventory (d).]

A trustee by mistake.

24. We may add in conclusion, that if a person by mistake or otherwise assume the character of trustee, when it really does not belong to him, and so becomes a trustee de son tort, he may be called to account by the cestuis que trust, for the monies he received under colour of the trust. Thus, where a testator devised an estate to W. Thompson upon certain trusts, with a power of sale to him, his heirs and assigns, and the trustee devised all his real estate to his sister Grace Thompson, charged with 50*l.* to his friend Watson, and died leaving his brother Jonas Thompson his heir-at-law, and, on the death of the trustee, Grace Thompson, assuming herself to be the devisee, sold the estate and received the money and paid it wrongfully to the tenant for life; in a suit against the representative of Grace Thompson, the Court held that, although she was neither heir nor devisee, yet as she had acted as trustee and received the money in that character, she was accountable for it to the cestuis que trust (e). [And in a recent case in the House of Lords the same principle was applied, and it was held (reversing

CHAPTER XII.

OF THE LEGAL ESTATE IN THE TRUSTEE.

Upon this subject we propose to treat, First. Of vesting the legal estate in the trustee; Secondly. Of the properties and devolution of the legal estate; and Thirdly. What persons taking the legal estate will be bound by the trust.

SECTION I.

OF VESTING THE LEGAL ESTATE IN THE TRUSTEE.

I. With reference to the Statute of Uses.

Statute of uses.

1. In the case of a simple trust, as the statute of 27 Henry the Eighth operates upon the first use, whether designated in the instrument as a use or trust, if a conveyance or devise be to A. and his heirs "in trust" for B. and his heirs, the possession will be executed in B. (a); and the statute must operate, notwithstanding the intention of the settlor to the contrary, for the will of the subject cannot control the express enactment of the legislature (b). In order, therefore, to prevent the legal estate from being executed in the cestui que trust, it is necessary to vest in the trustee not only the ancient common law fee, but also the primary use, as, by conveying or devising "to the trustee and his heirs to the use of the trustee and his heirs" (c), or "unto and to the use of the trustee and his heirs" (d); for

(a) As in Austen v. Taylor, 1 Eden, 361; Robinson v. Grey, 9 East, 1; William v. Waters, 14 M. & W. 166, &c. See Broughton v. Langley, 2 Salk. 679; Chapman v. Blissett, Cas. t. Talb. 150.

(b) See Carwardine v. Carwardine, 1 Eden, 36. In Gregory v. Henderson, 4 Taunt. 772, Judges Chambre and Gibbs laid a stress on the testator's intent, but Judge Heath referred the case to the true principle, viz. that the trustees having a duty to perform, it was a trust special, and so out of the statute.

(c) Robinson v. Comyns, Cas. t. Talb. 164; Attorney-General v. Scott, id. 138; Hopkins v. Hopkins, 1 Atk. 589, per Lord Hardwicke.

although by the latter form of limitation the trustee will be in by the common law, yet, as the possession and the use are both vested in the trustee, the trust over, as not being the primary use, will not be effected by the statute.

Special trusts not within the Act.

2. Special trusts are not within the purview of the Act of Henry the Eighth (a); and therefore, if any agency be imposed on the trustee, as by a limitation to A. and his heirs, upon trust to pay the rents (b), or to convey the estate (c), or if any control is to be exercised, or duty is to be performed, as in the case of a trust to apply the rents to a person's maintenance (d), or in making repairs (e), or to preserve contingent remainders (f), and à fortiori if to raise a sum of money (g), or to dispose of by sale (h), in all these cases as the trust is of a special character, the operation of the statute of uses is effectually excluded. So if an estate be devised to trustees upon trust for a feme covert for her sole and separate use, and her receipts alone to be discharges (i). But if an estate be released by deed to A. and his heirs "upon trust," after the marriage of the relessor "for her and her assigns for life, for her own sole and separate use," but no active duty in respect of the separate use is expressed to be reposed in the trustee personally, a common law court has rejected the sole and separate use as an estate known only in equity, and held the legal estate for life to be executed in the feme (j).

Trust to "permit and suffer A. to receive," &c., executed by the Act.

3. And if the trust be simply to "permit and suffer A. to receive the rents" (k), the legal estate is executed in A. However, if the lands be devised to three persons and their heirs in trust to permit A. to receive the net rents for her life for her own use, and after her death to permit B. to receive the net rents for her life for her sole and separate use, with remainder over and a power of sale to the trustees, it has been held that the legal estate is in the trustees, for they are to receive the rents, and thereout pay the land-tax and other charges on the estate, and hand over the net rents only to the tenant for life (a).

[Maintenance clause.]

[4. And where real estate was devised to trustees their heirs and assigns, to the use of A. for life with remainder to the use of such child or children of A. as should attain twenty-one as tenants in common in fee, with remainders over, and the testator "empowered his trustees to apply the income to which, under the disposition thereinbefore contained, any infant devisee should be presumptively or otherwise entitled towards the maintenance and education or otherwise for the benefit of such devisee during his minority," it was held by V. C. Hall that the legal fee was in the trustees, inasmuch as the provision for maintenance showed that the intention was that the trustees should, under the disposition to them their heirs and assigns, take an estate by virtue of which they would receive the rents and profits (b).]

Charge of debts.

5. If the legal estate be limited to the trustees charged with debts, or annuities, and subject thereto in trust for A., but no direction to the trustees personally to pay the debts or annuities (c), here, as the trustees have no agency assigned to them, but merely stand seised in trust, the statute will operate, and execute the possession in A.

Doe v. Nicholls.

6. And where copyholds were devised to trustees during the minority of the testator's son, "the same to be transferred to him" when he attained twenty-one, and if he died under twenty-one the testator gave the estate over, it was held that the trustees took a chattel interest only, until the son attained twenty-one, and that the copyholds then vested in the son. It was said, that if the devise were to the son on attaining twenty-one without the intervention of trustees, the admission of the son as tenant on the rolls would operate as a transfer of the estate, and that the words "the same to be transferred" did not imply that the trustees were to transfer the legal estate (a). This construction, however, appears to be somewhat forced, and is not quite satisfactory.

Trust to pay, or permit, &c.

7. Where the trust is "to pay unto or permit and suffer a person to receive" the rents, as the former words would create a special trust, and the latter would be construed a use executed by the statute, the Court holds, for want of a better reason, that the former or latter words shall prevail, as the instrument, in which they are found, happens to be a deed or a will (b). But it may be asked, why might not the settlor have meant to vest a discretion in the trustees, either to receive the rents themselves, or to put the cestui que trust in possession, and if so, the intention would require that the legal estate should be in the trustee. However, numerous titles must have been accepted on the faith of the case referred to, and at this distance of time it might be dangerous to reverse it; and this is the view adopted by the Court (c). [But as the rule establishes no principle, it will readily yield to indication of a contrary intention; and where the trust was to "pay the rents unto, or permit the same to be received by" one of the trustees, the Court of Appeal were of opinion that, as effect could be given to both sets of words, there was no inconsistency, and held, upon the construction of the will, that the doctrine of Doe v. Biggs had no application, and that the legal estate remained in the trustees (d).]

II. Of the quantity of legal estate taken by the trustee with reference to the object and scope of the trust.

General rules.

As legal limitations are properly cognisable by a common-law court, it might be supposed that the construction put upon the instrument would stand wholly unaffected by the engraftment of a trust. But as the effect of the instrument is to be ruled by the intention, and as every person in limiting an estate to a trustee must be guided by the equity he proposes to raise upon it, the Courts as well of common law as of equity, and more particularly in the case of wills, have entered upon a consideration of the trust, in order to regulate within certain limits the extent of the legal interest by the scope and object of the equitable (a).

The following rules of construction have been adopted by the Courts in reference to this branch of our subject in the case of wills, and, except so far as they are controlled by the positive enactments of the Wills Act (b), must still be resorted to for guidance.

First, Wherever a trust is created, a legal estate sufficient for the execution of the trust shall, if possible, be implied: Secondly, The legal estate limited to the trustee shall not be carried further than the complete execution of the trust necessarily requires.

First. As to the former rule.

Legal estate supplied in toto on account of the trust.

1. The Court has in some instances supplied the estate in toto; as where a testator devised to a feme covert the issues and profits of certain lands to be paid by his executors, and it was held that the land itself was devised to the executors in trust to receive the rents and profits and apply them to the use of the wife (c).

Legal estates enlarged.

2. In other cases the Court has extended the estate, as where, before the Wills Act, the devise was to three trustees, and the survivor of them, and the executors and administrators of such survivor, upon trust to pay certain annuities for lives, and it was ruled that the trustees took an estate for the several lives of the annuitants (d).

Trust to sell confers a fee.

3. If land, said Lord Hardwicke, be devised to a man without the word heirs, and a trust be declared which can be satisfied in no other way but by the trustees taking an inheritance, it has been construed that a fee passes (e). Thus a trust to sell (f), even on a contingency (g), confers a fee simple as indispensable to the execution of the trust; and the construction is the same

(a) As to the cognisance of trusts by a court of law, see Sims v. Marryatt, 17 Q. B. 292; May v. Taylor, 6 Man. & Gr. 261; Walker v. Richardson, 2 M. & W. 891.

In Doe v. Simpson, a life estate only was implied, as the trustee was merely such; but in Jenkins v. Jenkins, the trustee being also interested beneficially, the construction was more liberal, and it was thought the fee simple passed.

in a sale implied, as where the devise is upon trust out of the rents and profits of an estate to discharge certain legacies, made payable at a day inconsistent with the application of the annual profits only (a).

Charges not implying a power of sale.

4. But a power of selling will not be implied by a limitation to a trustee, or to a trustee his executors and administrators for and until payment of debts and legacies generally (b), or for raising a sum of money out of the rents and profits (c); and therefore, in such cases, before the Wills Act, where nothing in the context implied a limitation of the fee, a chattel interest only would have passed. But, if a greater estate be limited expressly, as by a devise to A. and his heirs upon trust to pay debts, the Court has no jurisdiction to cut down the expression and reduce the estate to a chattel (d); though if a chattel interest be carved out of the fee and be so limited, the word "heirs" may be rejected as inconsistent with the estate, as where lands are devised to trustees and their heirs, until an infant attains twenty-one, and then to the infant in fee (e).

Grant or devise to two and the heirs of the survivor.

5. If an estate be granted to two, and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, they are not joint tenants in fee, but take a freehold for their joint lives, with a contingent remainder to the one that may happen to survive. The same construction will be put upon a devise expressed simply in the same terms without any trust annexed, or even if there be a trust, provided the nature of it do not require the fee simple to be vested in the trustees (f). But if such a devise, even to beneficiaries, be coupled with words pointing to a joint tenancy, the construction will be a joint fee, as if the gift be to two and the survivor of them and their heirs (g), or to them as joint tenants, and the survivors and survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor (h). And if the devise be to two and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor upon trusts that require the fee simple to be vested in the trustees, or upon trust for sale, the prevailing opinion is, that notwithstanding the old case of Vick v. Edwards (a) to the contrary, the Courts would compel a purchaser to accept a title on the assumption that the trustees took the fee simple (b). "Whatever doubts," observes Butler, "were formerly entertained, it now appears to be the settled opinion of the profession that a devise to two and the survivor of them, and the heirs and assigns of such survivor, enables the trustees to vest the fee in the purchaser, and that titles under such a devise are accepted with a conveyance from the trustees and without the concurrence of the heir" (c).

Implied devise in the word "trustee."

6. If a testator simply appoint a person his executor and trustee, it seems the latter word is not so exclusively applied to real estate, as to carry by implication to the executor a devise of the testator's freeholds, but if the testator direct certain acts to be done by the trustee, [or by the executor,] which belong to the owner of the freeholds, [or which require that the trustee or executor should have dominion over the real estate,] such a devise will be implied (d); [but the implication will only arise when it is necessary to make the words used by the testator sensible (e)]. And so if a testator appoint a person his "trustee of inheritance," which is equivalent to making him the trustee of his inheritable property (f); or if a testator appoint "A. and B. trustees as also their heirs or assigns, not making them accountable for any losses except by their own neglect, and the one not to suffer for the other's negligence" (g). And if a testator constitute a trustee by will, and devise the legal estate to him, and then by a codicil "nominates and appoints another person to be trustee" in his place, the codicil not only confers the office of the trusteeship, but also carries the legal estate with it (h).

If a testator by will devises to several persons upon trust, and nominates them his trustees and executors, and then by codicil revokes the appointment of one of them as executor, and substitutes another person as executor in his place, such revocation and new appointment extends only to the executorship, and does not by implication affect the trusteeship (a).

Legal estate curtailed from the nature of the trust.

Secondly, we proceed to illustrate the rule, that the legal estate limited to the trustee shall not be greater than is required by the trust.

1. If a freehold estate be devised to A. and his heirs upon trust to permit B. to receive the rents during his life, and on his death to convey to C. in fee; here, as during the life of B. the trustees are to be merely passive, but after his death are to do an act, the legal estate for the life of B. is vested in B., and the remainder only in the trustee (b). On the other hand, if an estate be devised to A. and his heirs in trust, to pay the rents to B. for his life, and on his death, the testator devises the estate to C. in fee, here the legal estate for the life of B. is in the trustee, and the legal estate of the remainder is vested in C. (c). So where a copyhold was devised to A. and his heirs upon trust for the separate use of B. a feme covert during her life, and after her decease the testatrix devised the same to such uses as B. should appoint, and in default of appointment to the right heirs of B., it was thought by Judge Heath that the trustee took a base fee determinable by an executory devise over on the death of the feme covert, and by Judge Chambre that the devise amounted only to an estate pur autre vie (d). So where a testator devised leaseholds for years to trustees upon trust for A. for life, and after the death of A. the testator bequeathed them to B., it was held that the trustees had the legal estate during the life of A. only (e). Thus in freeholds, copyholds, and leaseholds, where there is an indefinite devise to trustees and their heirs, executors, or administrators, upon certain trusts confined to the life of one person, followed by a simple devise to another for the absolute interest, in each case the estate of the trustees is limited by implication to the life of the person who takes the life interest (a).

Wigram considered himself bound by it in Brown v. Whiteway, 8 Hare, 145, and the Court of Q. B. recognised its authority, at least to a partial extent, in Toller v. Attwood, 15 Q. B. 951.

It has sometimes been argued that where freeholds are coupled with copyholds or leaseholds upon certain trusts, if the legal estate of the copyholds or leaseholds be vested in the trustees, there is a kind of attraction which will cause the legal estate of the freeholds also to be vested in the trustees; but whatever attraction may arise from the presumption that the different kinds of property were meant to be held together during the continuance of the trusts affecting them, there is no such attraction as will keep the legal estates of any species of property vested in the trustees beyond the period limited for the trusts of that property (b). It seems, however, that in a deed, where the construction adheres more strictly to the letter, a limitation to trustees and their heirs upon trust to pay an annuity for life only, with remainders over, would have conferred the fee simple (c).

Limitation to trustees and their heirs to preserve contingent remainders, the words "during the life of," &c., being omitted.

2. In a devise to A. for life, remainder to trustees and their heirs to preserve contingent remainders (the words "during the life of A." being omitted), with remainders over, the trustees are construed to take not a fee simple, but an estate for the life of A. (d). And Sir W. Grant expressed himself in favour of a similar construction where the instrument was a deed (e); but it has since been decided that in the latter case a fee simple passes (f), unless it be quite clear upon the face of the deed itself that the words "during the life of A." were meant to be in the deed, and were wanting through inadvertence (g). Of course there can be no such restriction of the estate by implication where the natural sense of the words admits of a fair and reasonable construction; as if before the Act of 1845 (h) the fee simple in the trustees would have supported contingent limitations that would otherwise have been left at the mercy of the tenant for life (a).

Trust to lease, &c., confers fee simple.

3. But if a devise be to trustees and their heirs upon a trust that cannot be executed without an absolute control over the property, as in trust to lease for an indefinite number of years (b), or to raise a sum of money by sale (c), and subject thereto to uses in strict settlement, the trustees will not be held to take a mere power so as to let in the statute to execute the uses in strict settlement, but will be construed to take the legal estate in fee, and the uses that are limited will stand as equitable interests.

Charge of debts.

So if copyholds be devised to trustees (who are also appointed executors of the testator) and the survivor of them, and the heirs of such survivor, charged with debts, and subject thereto upon trust to pay the rents to the testator's daughter for life, and after her death, the copyholds are devised by the testator directly to the heirs of the body of such tenant for life, here, as the charge of debts may require the fee simple to be in the trustees, they take the legal estate not only for the life of the tenant for life but absolutely, and the issue in tail take only equitable estates (d).

[So where a testator directs his debts to be paid, or directs them to be paid by his executors, and devises real estate to trustees and their heirs upon trusts which do not exhaust the fee, and then devises the real estate after the determination of

It has been observed in the "Treatise of Powers" (Sug. Pow. 111, 8th edit.), that this rule was not attended to in the case of Hawker v. Hawker, 3 B. & Ald. 537. The devise was probably considered to be of a double aspect, viz. to the trustees and their heirs upon trust to sell, &c., if one event happened, and upon trust for the daughter, &c., if another event happened, and as the latter series of limitations took effect, and therefore no power of sale was to be exercised by the trustees, it was not necessary under the circumstances to arm them with the inheritance. The case of Warter v. Hutchinson, 5 Moore, 143, 1 B. & C. 721, is more difficult to be reconciled with the rule we are discussing. The construction appears to have been, that, as the limitation to the trustees and their heirs was expressly limited to the period until A. attained twenty-one, the estate was intended to be a chattel interest only, and the charges were to be raised either by sale or mortgage of that chattel interest, or out of the inheritance by virtue of an implied power.

(d) Creaton v. Creaton, 3 Sm. & G. 386.

the preceding trusts directly to a third person, and appoints the trustees his executors, the trustees take the entire legal fee by virtue of the charge of debts (a).]

Present rule regulating devises to trustees.

4. Recent cases have established the following important qualification of the rule now under consideration, viz., that where an estate is in the first instance given to trustees and their heirs upon trusts which do not exhaust the equitable fee simple, and for which a particular estate short of the legal fee in the trustees would be sufficient, but discretionary powers are superadded which cannot be exercised by the trustees without arming them with the means of passing the fee simple, there the trustees do not take a particular estate by way of vested interest with a power under the Statute of Uses or by a common law authority of passing the fee, but they retain the legal fee simple given to them in the first instance, on the footing that they were meant to exercise the discretion given to them by virtue of their ownership and not by the mere operation of a power (b). Baron Parke observed, in the leading case (c), "When an estate is given to trustees, all the trusts must primâ facie at least be performed by them by virtue and in respect of the estate vested in them.—The fee is in terms devised to them, and it would be a very strained and artificial construction to hold first that the natural meaning of the words is to be cut down, because they would give an estate more extensive than the trust required, and then when the trust does require the whole fee simple, to hold that that must be supplied by way of power defeating the estate to the subsequent devisees, and not out of the interest of the trustees."

Devise to uses.

5. The rule of construction laid down in this case has since been followed, even where the language of the subsequent limitations has been peculiarly applicable to a devise of the legal estate, as where after the primary devise to the trustees and their heirs upon limited trusts with discretionary powers the estate was expressed to be limited in strict settlement, by a declaration of uses to that effect (d).

Where the powers do not affect the fee.

6. But where the devise, before the Wills Act, was to trustees and their heirs upon trust for a person for life, and after her death upon certain trusts during the minority of her children, followed by a direct devise to the children on the youngest attaining 21, without words of limitation (and therefore construed to give life estates only) with a mere power of leasing for 21 years, to be exercised during the continuance of the trust without any purpose affecting the fee simple, and which power of leasing extended to other estates also, which were clearly devised to the beneficiaries directly, it was held that the mere power of leasing was not sufficient to countervail the rule that the legal estate was not to be extended beyond the necessity of the trust, and that under all the circumstances the trustees took an estate for the life of the mother and the minority of the children with a power of leasing (a).

Wills Act.

7. The law upon the subject has undergone some alteration from the provisions of the Act (7 W. 4. and 1 Vict. c. 26) for the amendment of the law of wills.

By the 30th section it is declared, "that where any real estate (other than or not being a presentation to a church) shall be devised to any trustee or executor, such devise shall be construed to pass the fee simple, or other the whole estate or interest which the testator had power to dispose of by will in such real estate, unless a definite term of years, absolute or determinable, or an estate of freehold shall thereby be given to him, expressly or by implication."

And by the following section it is enacted, "that where any real estate shall be devised to a trustee without any express limitation of the estate to be taken by such trustee, and the beneficial interest in such real estate or in the surplus rents and profits thereof shall not be given to any person for life, or shall be given for life, but the purposes of the trust may continue beyond the life of such person, such devise shall be construed to vest in such trustee the fee simple or other the whole legal estate which the testator had power to dispose of by will, and not an estate determinable when the purposes of the trust shall be satisfied."

Effect of the Act.

The effect of these provisions is by no means clear, but it is conceived that a definite chattel interest, as a term of 99 years, or a simple freehold, as an estate for the life of A., may still either be limited expressly to trustees or be raised by implication; and that in cases where before the Act an indefinite chattel interest would have passed, as in a devise to trustees (without the word "heirs") to pay debts, or a freehold with an indefinite interest superadded, as in Doe v. Simpson (a), there the words of the will are for the future made to pass the fee simple (b).

SECTION II.

THE PROPERTIES AND DEVOLUTION OF THE LEGAL ESTATE IN THE TRUSTEE.

THIS branch of our subject we propose to consider, First, with reference to the common law; and, Secondly, with reference to the construction of particular statutes.

First. Of the legal estate at common law.

Legal estate at common law.

1. It may be stated as a general rule, that the legal estate in the hands of the trustee has at common law precisely the same properties and incidents as if the trustee were the usufructuary owner.

Of dower, courtesy, &c.

If real estate be put in trust it is subject at law in the hands of the trustee to curtesy (c), and dower (d), and in the case of copyhold to freebench (e); and until a late Act the trust estate was liable to forfeiture (f), and on the decease of the trustee, if there was no heir, it fell by escheat to the lord (g); but by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, ss. 15, 46, (substituted for 4 & 5 W. 4. c. 23,) the legal estate of trust property was protected from forfeiture and escheat (h). And by another Act (i), it was enacted that, "Upon

(i) 38 & 39 Vict. c. 87, s. 48 (repealing 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 5). In a recent case a discussion arose as to the meaning of the expression a bare trustee. V. C. Hall observed, "Where there is a trustee whose trust is to convey and the time has arrived for a conveyance by him, he is, I think, a bare trustee," and then adverting to Dart's "Vendors and Purchasers," in which it is laid down, that "a bare trustee would probably be held to mean a trustee to whose office no duties were originally attached, or who, although such duties were originally attached to his office, would, on the requisition of his cestui que trust, be compellable in equity to convey the estate to them or by their direction, and has been requested by them so to convey it," the V. C. approved the death of a bare trustee, intestate as to any corporeal or incorporeal hereditament, of which such trustee was seised in fee simple, such hereditament should vest, like a chattel real, in the legal personal representative from time to time of such trustee." But the Act was not to apply to lands registered under the same Act. [This enactment is, however, in the case of deaths occurring after the 31st December, 1881, repealed and its place supplied by a provision that "where an estate or interest of inheritance, or limited to the heir as special occupant, in any tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal, is vested on any trust, or by way of mortgage (a), in any person solely, the same shall on his death, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition, devolve to and become vested in his personal representatives or representative from time to time, in like manner as if the same were a chattel real vesting in them or him; and accordingly all the like powers, for one only of several joint personal representatives, as well as for a single personal representative, and for all the personal representatives together, to dispose of and otherwise deal with the same, shall belong to the deceased's personal representatives or representative from time to time, with all the like incidents, but subject to all the like rights, equities, and of the statement, save only that the words, "and has been requested by them so to convey it," should be left out, inasmuch as they were not an important or necessary ingredient. But [the late author of this work has doubted the propriety of this omission on the ground that] if an estate be vested in trustees in trust to sell and divide the proceeds amongst a class, the trustees are bound to convey by the direction of the class if sui juris, but are not bare trustees until the joint request to convey has countermanded the trust for sale. Christie v. Ovington, 1 Ch. D. 279. [In a subsequent case, Sir G. Jessel, M.R., withheld his approval of the above definition of a "bare trustee," and, while expressly abstaining from deciding the point, intimated an opinion that a "bare trustee," meant a trustee without any beneficial interest, whether he had active duties to perform or not. See Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority, 9 Ch. D. 582. But in a still later case V. C. Bacon held that trustees of real estate devised upon trust for sale, the sale of which had been ordered in an action to administer the testator's estate were bare trustees, although they took beneficial interests in the proceeds of sale; Re Docwra, 29 Ch. D. 693; and yet more recently Stirling, J., has preferred to follow Christie v. Ovington rather than Morgan v. Swansea Urban Sanitary Authority; see Re Cunningham, W. N., 1891, p. 77; 39 W. R. 469.]

[(a) By 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 4, the legal personal representative of a mortgagee of a freehold estate, or of a copyhold estate to which the mortgagee was admitted, was empowered on payment of all sums secured by the mortgage to convey or surrender the mortgaged estate. This section was held not to apply to a transfer of a mortgage of a freehold estate, Re Spradbery's Mortgage, 14 Ch. D. 514; or to a sale by the executors, under a power in the mortgage deed, Re White's Mortgage, 51 L. J. N. S. Ch. 856; and has in the case of a death occurring after the 31st December, 1881, been repealed by 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 30.]

obligations, as if the same were a chattel real vesting in them or him; and for the purposes of this section the personal representatives for the time being of the deceased shall be deemed in law his heirs and assigns within the meaning of all trusts and powers" (a). The section was held, to apply to copyholds (b), but it is now enacted by the Copyhold Act, 1887, which was passed on the 16th of September, 1887, that the section "shall not apply to land of copyhold or customary tenure vested in the tenant on the court rolls of any manor upon any trust or by way of mortgage" (c). The effect of this provision has been held to be retrospective, so that the legal estate in copyholds which has devolved upon the personal representatives of a sole trustee dying after the 31st of December, 1881, and before the passing of the Act of 1887, is divested from them, and vests in the customary heir or devisee, but the validity of any disposition previously made by such representatives is unaffected (d).]

Trust chattels subject to forfeiture, &c.

2. So chattels real and personal held upon trust were forfeitable until the Act of 4 & 5 W. 4. c. 23 (which extends to personal as well as real estate), for the offence of the trustee (e); but in

[(a) 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 30. If upon the death, intestate, of a sole surviving trustee new trustees are appointed under the Trustee Acts, the vesting order is sometimes made so as to vest the trust estates in them "for the estate therein which would now be vested in (the intestate) if now living," Set. on Dec., 4th Ed. p. 539, [or "for all the estate and interest which the deceased trustee had in him immediately before (or at the time of) his death," Re Rackstraw's Trusts, 52 L. T. N.S. 612; 33 W. R. 559. But this form of order will only be adopted in exceptional cases, where it is difficult or impossible to identify the heir; or where the Court is satisfied that the estate has not been dealt with since the death of the last surviving trustee in such a manner that parties not before the Court might be prejudiced by an order in that form; Re Bishop of Sarum, W. N., 1886, p. 140; 55 L. T. N.S. 313.] Where the order was made vesting the property in the new trustees "for the estate therein now vested in the heir-at-law of the deceased trustee," and letters of administration were subsequently taken out to the estate of the deceased trustee, the question arose whether the vesting order had any effect, having regard to the 30th sect. of the recent Act, and the Court, upon motion, directed that "notwithstanding the previous order, the land should vest in the new trustees for all the estate therein vested in the legal personal representative," Re Pilling's Trusts, 26 Ch. D. 432. Where the sole heiress-at-law of a testator had died intestate subsequently to the Act, and it was desired to appoint new trustees of the will on a petition served only on the heir-at-law, North, J., made an order vesting the property in the new trustees for all such estate as was vested in the heiress at the time of her death. Re Williams's Trusts, 36 Ch. the case of two joint trustees, a moiety only was forfeited, and the King and the other trustee were tenants in common (a).

Devolve on executor.

On the decease of the trustee the chattel, as part of his personal estate at law, devolves on his executor or administrator. And if the executor die after probate, having appointed an executor, the chattel becomes vested in that executor.

Renunciation by one executor.

3. Until a late Act, if an executor had renounced probate, the renunciation, though primâ facie absolute (b), might have been retracted at any time before a new administration was granted. Hence where two executors were named and one renounced, and the acting executor died having appointed executors, but predeceased his co-executor, it was necessary to take out letters of administration to the original testator, for the acting executor not being the survivor did not transmit the interest, and the renouncing executor declined to act (c). But now by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, s. 79, where an executor renounces probate, the rights of such executor are made to cease; and the representation to the testator and the administration of his effects, without further renunciation, go, devolve and are committed as if such person had not been appointed executor (d). But the Act does not apply to the case of a person who renounced before the Act came into operation, and if he renounced before the Act, any second renunciation after the Act for the purpose of bringing himself within it is ultra vires and nugatory (e), and a disclaimer, or renunciation by answer in chancery was held not to operate as a renunciation within the Act (f), and a renunciation is not complete until it has been entered and recorded in the proper office (g). But it has not been settled that an executor after renunciation may not on proper grounds retract his renunciation (h). By 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, s. 22, whenever an executor survives the testator, but dies without having taken probate, or is cited to take probate and does not appear, the right of such person in respect of the executorship shall wholly cease, and representation to the testator and the administration of his effects shall and may, without any further renunciation, go, devolve and be committed in like manner as if such person had not been appointed executor.

Whether term in a trustee requires a prerogative probate.

4. If the lands comprised in a trust term were situate in a different diocese from that in which the trustee was domiciled, it seems that previously to 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, which created the Court of Probate, a prerogative probate or limited administration was necessary before the term could have been legally transferred (a). If there be a difficulty in the way of probate or grant of general letters of administration, special letters of administration limited to the trust property may be taken out (b).

Administration limited to trust property.

Whether a chattel may be taken in execution for the debt of the trustee.

5. A chattel found by the sheriff in the possession of a debtor is primâ facie the debtor's own property, and as such is liable to be taken in execution for his debt, but if the sheriff knowing the chattel to be bound by a clear trust for another were to sell it for the debt of the trustee, it would be a tortious act in him (c), and the creditor who received the proceeds would be accountable as a trustee (d), and the cestui que trust might, upon seizure by the sheriff, establish his equitable title at law upon an interpleader summons (e).

On the other hand, if a person be the cestui que trust of an equitable chattel, the sheriff may take it in execution for the debt of the cestui que trust; and this is so even when the cestui que trust claims under an agreement for valuable consideration for the settlement of after-acquired property (f). But such an agreement is a roving one and executory, and does not give the cestui que trust the privileges of the specific purchaser until actual possession of the chattel under the agreement, and the interest of the cestui que trust may therefore be defeated by a judgment creditor of the settlor, who takes out execution before actual possession by the cestui que trust (g).

The common law recognises assets in the hands of an executor to be trust property.

6. Assets in the hands of an executor are regarded as a species of trust property, even by the common law, which in respect of them has engrafted upon itself a quasi equitable jurisdiction: as, if an executrix marry, she may by will, without the consent of her husband, appoint an executor in whom the assets will vest,

General words.

But, in dealings with the trust estate, the Court has regard to the trust, and will not construe general words to pass the trust estate where the assurance, if so construed, would amount to a breach of trust (a).

Might devise or bequeath it.

9. As the trustee might at law dispose of the property in his lifetime, so he might devise or bequeath it at his death; [but in the case of a trustee or mortgagee (b) dying after the 31st December, 1881, "any estate or interest of inheritance, or limited to the heir as special occupant, in any tenements or hereditaments, corporeal or incorporeal," will, notwithstanding any testamentary disposition devolve on the personal representative of the trustee or mortgagee, in the same manner as if it were a chattel real (c). The title therefore to such property must now be made through the legal personal representative.]

But a trust estate will not in all cases pass by the same words in a will as a beneficial ownership would, for wherever the estate does not pass by operation of law solely, but through the medium of the intention, it becomes necessary, in order to ascertain the effect of the instrument, to take into consideration the particular circumstances of the trust.

In what cases the trust estate will pass by a general devise.

10. Whether a trust estate shall pass inclusively in a general devise, is a question that has been frequently under discussion, [and notwithstanding the change in the law introduced by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (d), is still a question of importance where the death of the trustee occurred prior to the commencement of that Act.] The rule as originally established was, that a general expression would carry a dry trust estate (e), but afterwards there were some misgivings upon the subject (f) (1); and the Court at last acceded to the propo-

How the opinion arose that a general devise would not pass a trust estate.

(1) The doubt appears to have originated in part from an expression of Lord Hardwicke in Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 605, that by a devise of all lands, tenements and hereditaments, a mortgage in fee would not pass, unless the equity of redemption were foreclosed. But Lord Hardwicke was not speaking here of the legal estate, but of the beneficial interest in the mortgage. The same thing was said in the same sense in Strode v. Russel, 2 Vern. 625. Lord Hardwicke's sition, that general words would not pass trust estates, unless there appeared a positive intention that they should so pass (a). The question was reconsidered before Lord Eldon, when the result of the cases, after a careful examination of them, was declared to be, that, where the will contained words large enough, and there was no expression authorising a narrower construction, nor any such disposition of the estate as it was unlikely a testator would make of property not his own (as complicated limitations, or any purpose inconsistent with as probable intention to devise as to let it descend), in such a case the trust estate would pass (b).

Charge of debts, &c., will exclude the trust estate.

11. A charge of debts, legacies, annuities, &c., and à fortiori, a direction to sell, is considered a sufficient indication of an intention not to include a mere trust estate (c); as where a testator having a trust estate and also estates of his own, gave and devised "all his real estate, whatsoever and wheresoever, to G. T., her heirs and assigns for ever, charged with 50*l.* to his friend W.", it was held that the trust estate did not pass (d). And so where a testator gave, devised, and bequeathed to trustees all such real estates as were then vested in him by way of mortgage, the better to enable his said trustees to recover, get in, and receive the principal monies and interest which might be due thereon, it was ruled that the devise extended only to mortgages vested in the testator beneficially, and did not pass the legal estate in fee vested in the testator upon trust for another (e).

What expressions will or will not exclude the trust estate.

12. The expression "my real estates" will not restrict the authority has been cited on both sides of the question (compare Duke of Leeds v. Munday, 3 Ves. 348, with Ex parte Sergison, 4 Ves. 147); but that he approved of the old rule is evident from Ex parte Bowes, cited in Mr. Sanders's note to Casborne v. Scarfe, 1 Atk. 605. Lord Northington and Lord Thurlow are said to have entertained the same opinion. (See Ex parte Sergison, 4 Ves. 147; but, as to Lord Thurlow, see an obiter dictum, Pickering v. Vowles, 1 B. meaning to those vested in the testator beneficially (a), nor will a devise to A., his heirs and assigns, "to and for his and their own use and benefit" (b), nor a devise to A. and her heirs, to be disposed of by her by will or otherwise, as she may think fit (c): though under a devise to a woman for her separate use, as the words import a beneficial enjoyment, a dry legal estate will not pass (d); but a devise to a woman, "her heirs and assigns, for her and their own sole and absolute use," expresses only the absolute interest, and does not create a separate estate (e). Whether a residuary devise of lands to persons as tenants in common in equal shares, will pass a trust estate, has never been expressly decided, but a judicial opinion has been expressed that such a devise would not pass a dry trust estate (f). A devise to the testator's nephews and nieces share and share alike as tenants in common, and not as joint-tenants, as the class is unascertained at the date of the will, does not pass a trust estate (g). And if the devise be for A. for life or in tail, with remainders over, in strict settlement, the trust estate will not pass (h). "Where there is a limitation of real estate," said Lord Eldon, "in strict settlement, with a vast number of limitations, contingent remainders, executory devises, powers of jointuring, leasing, and raising sums of money, it is impossible to say the intention could be to give a dry trust estate" (i).

Distinction as to legal estate in mortgages.

13. The question whether the legal estate in a mortgage in fee passes by a general devise in the will of the mortgagee, stands on a different footing. The mortgagee has a beneficial interest in the property as a security, a distinction not always sufficiently adverted to, but which is strongly in favour of the legal estate passing to the person who is to receive the mortgage money (j). It is clear that the legal estate passes by a general devise of securities for money (k), and neither a general trust to sell and convert(a), nor a charge of debts(b), will prevent it from so passing. And it is conceived, notwithstanding a former decision of the Court of Exchequer (c), that the case of a general devise and bequest of real and personal estate charged with debts or legacies admits of no substantial distinction (d). But the legal estate will not pass by a general devise of real estate, if there be special trusts for sale or other limitations, &c., which would be inapplicable to an estate in mortgage (e). [The distinction between mortgaged estates and trust estates has ceased (except as to copyholds) to be material where the mortgagee or trustee dies after the 31st December, 1881; as in either case the power of disposing of the legal estate is now vested in the personal representatives of the mortgagee or trustee so dying (f).]

[Distinction now not material.]

14. The rule that trust estates passed under a general devise assumed that a testator by making such a devise did not commit a breach of trust, otherwise general words would not have been construed to carry the trust estate (g). However, it was observed in one case by the late Vice-Chancellor of England that in his opinion it was not lawful for a trustee to dispose of the estate, but that he ought to permit it to descend; and that there was no material difference between a conveyance inter vivos and a devise, for the latter was nothing but a post mortem conveyance (h). But Lord Langdale considered that there was a wide distinction between a conveyance in the trustee's lifetime and a devise by his will; for during his life he had a personal discretion confided to him, which he could not delegate, but the settlor could not have reposed any personal confidence in the trustee's heir, for it could not be known beforehand, who such heir would be; and that if the estate were allowed to descend, it might become vested in married women, infants, or bankrupts, or persons out of the jurisdiction; and he could not therefore hold it to be a breach of trust to transmit the estate by will to trustworthy devisees (a). [But this question has since the recent alteration in the law under which the trust estate (b) devolves as a chattel real ceased to be of much practical interest.]

Whether a devisee can execute the trust.

15. How far a devisee of the trust estate can execute the trust, will depend on the intention of the settlor, to be collected from the terms in which the instrument is expressed. Thus, real or personal estate may be so vested in A. that A. alone shall personally execute the trust; and in such a case, the heir or executor of A. though he took the legal estate, could not act as trustee (c); and à fortiori in such a case the devisee, though made the depositary of the legal estate, would have no authority to execute the trust (d). [It was laid down in former editions of this work that] if a settlor vested an estate in A. upon trust, that A. and his heirs should sell, and A. devised the estate, neither the heir nor devisee could sell; not the heir, for as regards this estate the descent had been intercepted and there was no heir, and not the devisee, for he was not the person to whom the execution of the trust was committed (e). [This proposition was founded upon Cooke v. Crawford, and subsequent cases, but in the recent case of Osborne to Rowlett (f), the late M. R., after an elaborate discussion of the cases, came to the conclusion that Cooke v. Crawford was wrongly decided, and he held that where real estate was devised to trustees and their heirs, in trust for sale, the trust was annexed to the estate, and that as the surviving trustee might have lawfully devised the trust estate the devisee might execute the trust, and he expressly overruled Cooke v. Crawford. In a subsequent case, however, before the Court of Appeal (g), in which the precise point did not arise, L. JJ. James and Baggallay expressed a doubt whether Osborne to Rowlett was rightly decided, and the question must in the present state of the authorities be considered as an open one. It may be observed that the M. R. justified his decision on the ground that the decision in Cooke v. Crawford, was, in his opinion, based on the assumed principle that a trustee, unless authorized so to do, could not lawfully devise the trust estate, and that, as that principle has been overruled by subsequent cases, Cooke v. Crawford has ceased to be a binding authority, but it is submitted that the real ground for the decision in Cooke v. Crawford was that the authority to execute the trust must be directly given by the original settlor or testator, and that the surviving trustee by devising the estate to a person not so authorized did not enable the devisee to execute the trust (a). It is submitted that this principle has not been called in question, whatever exceptions have been taken to the observations in Cooke v. Crawford, as to the duty of a trustee to let trust estates descend, and that however strong the argument might be (if the matter were one of first impression) in favour of holding that the trust may be executed by any person to whom the estate comes consistently with the provision of the original settlement or will, it is too late now to overrule Cooke v. Crawford, and the subsequent cases, and to introduce a new principle. And in a subsequent case in Ireland where a testatrix appointed A. and B. executors and trustees of her will, and devised real estate to them upon trust that they or the survivor should pay the rents to A. for his life, and after his death sell the estate, it was held that the executors of B., who survived A., could not make a title, notwithstanding the 30th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (b).]

16. In another case (c), where leaseholds were assigned to two trustees, their executors and administrators, upon trust; and the surviving trustee devised the leaseholds to A. and B. upon the same trusts, and appointed A. B. and C. executors; on a petition by A. and B. to the Court to have the trust fund, the proceeds of the leaseholds, paid out to them, Vice-Chancellor Kindersley refused, observing, that the surviving trustee had no authority to bequeath the execution of the trust, but could only pass the legal estate. The petition was then amended by joining C. as a co-petitioner, so that the petition was now that of the legatees, and also of the executors; but the Vice-Chancellor still refused, on the ground that the testator had himself declared, that his executors as such should not be trustees, and, therefore, since, by the bequest, he had taken the legal estate from those who ought Re Burtt's estate.

to have been trustees, there must be an appointment of new trustees.

Where the trust is confided to the trustee and his assigns.

17. But it most frequently happens that an estate is vested in A. upon trust, that A., his heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, shall hold upon the trust; and the question then is, whether a devisee of A. may, as falling under the description of assigns, not only take the estate, but also execute the trust? In Titley v. Wolstenholme (a), where the settlement contained no power of appointment of new trustees, it was held, that as a conveyance in the lifetime of the trustee to a stranger would have been a breach of trust, the word assign could mean only a devisee taking under a post mortem conveyance, when the personal confidence in the trustee necessarily ceased; and consequently that the devisees had not only the legal estate, but were properly trustees within the scope of the settlor's intention.

Titley v. Wolstenholme, doubted.

18. This case seems to have raised some scruple in the mind of V. C. afterwards L. J. Knight Bruce, for he observed that "What he should have done if Titley v. Wolstenholme had come before him he need not say, nor was he sure" (b). And the reasoning upon which Lord Langdale proceeded is not quite conclusive, for the word "assigns" does not necessarily imply a devise, as it would be satisfied by holding it to refer to a tenant by the curtesy or dowress, who would be assigns in law. However, the case was referred to, without disapprobation, by Lord Cottenham (c), and was approved by V. C. Stuart (d).

Hall v. May.

19. In Hall v. May (e), V. C. Wood went further, and held that under a trust containing the word assigns, and also a power to appoint new trustees, the devisee could make a title. It was conceded that the word "assigns" would not have enabled a trustee to transfer the trust by act inter vivos, and it could not be disputed that, as the instrument contained a power of appointment of new trustees, the assigns introduced by virtue of the power would give a meaning to the word "assigns" without having recourse to a devise. It was therefore necessary to lay down a broader principle than that acted upon in Titley v. Wolstenholme, and the doctrines upon which the Vice-Chancellor proceeded appear to have been substantially these—"That a settlor must have intended to provide a permanent machinery for the execution of the trust; that he could not have reposed any personal confidence in the trustee's heir, who was unknown, and could not be ascertained beforehand; that the settlor must have contemplated the possibility that on the death of the trustee the heir might be an infant, or lunatic, or bankrupt, or insolvent, and so either incapable or unfit to discharge the office; that it might therefore be reasonably inferred that the settlor meant by confiding the trust to the trustee, his heirs and assigns, to give the trustee a discretionary power of preventing these inconveniences by vesting the estate in a devisee; and that the circumstance that the settlor had given to the surviving trustee a power of appointing new trustees by deed, rather favoured the view that he also intended, when using the word 'assigns,' to confer on the trustee a right to devise the trust estate." The Court was also actuated by the feeling that many titles must have been accepted upon the footing of this enlarged construction. The decision was perhaps a bold one, but having been made it is not likely to be disturbed.

[20. Where a testator devised freehold and copyhold estates to trustees and their heirs upon trust that they "his said trustees or the trustees or trustee for the time being of that his will" should sell the estates, it was held that the copyhold heir of the surviving trustee to whom the estates had descended could execute the trust (a). [Sale by heir.]

21. Where under the 30th sect. of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, trust or mortgage estates become vested in the personal representatives of a trustee or mortagee, they are for the purposes of the section to "be deemed in law his heirs and assigns within the meaning of all trusts and powers." The wording of this section is not clear, but it is conceived that it enables the personal representatives to execute the trusts and powers which were originally reposed in the trustee, his heirs and assigns, and they may therefore sell in any case where there was a trust for sale or power of sale in the heirs and assigns of the last surviving trustee. [44 & 45 Vict. c. 41.]

By the Copyhold Act, 1887, s. 45 (b), it is provided that section 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, shall not apply to land of copyhold or customary tenure vested in the tenant on the Court Rolls of any manor upon any trust or by way of mortgage.]

completion of it, is a trustee for the purchaser sub modo only, and the estate may pass by a general devise in his will, where it would not have been included had the testator been a mere and express trustee (a). [But by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 4, it is enacted that where at the death of any person there is subsisting a contract enforceable against his heir or devisee for the sale of the fee simple or other freehold interest descendible to his heirs general in any land, his personal representatives shall, by virtue of the Act, have power to convey the land for all the estate and interest vested in him at his death in any manner proper for giving effect to the contract. But a conveyance made under this section is not to affect the beneficial rights of any person claiming under any testamentary disposition or as heir or next of kin of a testator or intestate, and the section applies only in cases of death after the 31st December, 1881 (b).]

[Personal representative can convey.]

23. As the dry legal estate in the hands of the trustee is [subject to the statutory modifications above referred to] affected by the operation of law, and may be disposed of by the act of the trustee, precisely in the same manner as if it were vested in him beneficially, so it confers upon him all the legal privileges and subjects him to all the legal burdens, that are incident to the usufructuary possession (c).

Trustee has the privileges and burdens of the legal estate.

Thus the trustee can bring any action respecting the trust estate in a court of law, the cestui que trust, though the absolute owner in equity, being at law regarded in the light of a stranger (d). So the trustee of a manor is the person to appoint the steward of it (e), and the trustee of an advowson to present to the church (f), but in either case he has the mere legal right, and is bound in equity to observe the directions of his cestui que trust (g).

Trustee must prove in bankruptcy.

24. So where a debtor to the trust estate becomes bankrupt, the trustee may prove for the debt, and that without the concurrence of the cestui que trust (a), unless it be such a simple trust as where A. is trustee for B. absolutely, and then it rests in the discretion of the judge to require the concurrence of the cestui que trust, for who knows but that B. may have already received the money (b). If the trustee himself become bankrupt a cestui que trust may obtain an order to prove for the whole sum and will be entitled to vote at the choice of the creditors' trustee (c). [A mere trustee of a debt for a person absolutely entitled and under no disability, cannot present a bankruptcy petition against the debtor without the concurrence of his cestui que trust; for as the cestui que trust who was competent to do so might have released the debt, "it might well happen that there was no real debt at all, although in legal parlance there might be a debt" (d); and it makes no difference that the trustee has obtained final judgment against the debtor for the amount, and has served a bankruptcy notice on the debtor under sect. 4, sub.-sect. (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (e). But the trustee can serve a good bankruptcy notice without the concurrence of the cestui que trust (f).]

of the old trustee, and another for the admission of the new trustee, it was held that he could claim but one fine, viz., for the admission of the new trustee (a); and where two or more trustees have been admitted jointly, on the decease of one neither fine nor heriot is due; not a fine for admission, because, joint tenants being seised per my et per tout, the estate is vested in the survivors or survivor by the original grant, and not a heriot, because, however many in number the trustees may be, they all form but one tenant to the lord, and therefore no heriot is demandable until the death of the longest liver (b). [On the death of a sole trustee of copyholds, who has not been admitted, and is therefore not the tenant on the court rolls, the copyholds vest, under section 30 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, in his legal personal representatives (c), who must pay the ordinary fines on their admission. But if the trustee has been admitted and is therefore tenant on the court rolls, this enactment does not apply, having to this extent been repealed by section 45 of the Copyhold Act, 1887 (d), and therefore on the death of such sole trustee of copyholds they vest in the customary heir or the devisee of trust estates. Where the equitable tenant for life of copyholds sells under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, section 20, the lord is only entitled to one fine (e).] If a copyhold be devised to trustees for five hundred years on certain trusts, with remainder to A. B. in fee, and the lord admits A. B. not as remainderman, but as a present tenant and upon payment of a full fine, the lord has a perfect tenant, and cannot compel the termors to be admitted (f). The Court in this case adverted to several points of practical importance, which are worth noticing. Thus: 1. It is commonly said that an admission is void, except so far as it follows the uses of the surrender or will; but the Court held that the excess of the admission is void only as against the parties interested, and that the lord may be estopped by his own act. 2. Where the termors have been admitted, the lord may require the admission of the executor of the last survivor, for the lord is entitled to a tenant or to possession. 3. The admission of the tenant for life or for years is a constructive admission of the remainderman, but such an admission does not disentitle the lord to call for a subsequent admission of the remainderman, where the custom of the manor gives the lord a fine in respect of the remainder. 4. The lord is not bound to admit a remainderman, but if he do admit him as such remainderman, although this admission may be a constructive admission of the particular estate, the lord may afterwards require the tenant for life or years to be admitted for the purposes of a new fine.

Principle on which the fine is assessed.

Where a number of trustees are admitted as the joint owners of the trust estate, the fine is to be assessed upon the following principle: for the first life is to be allowed the fine usually paid on the admission of a single tenant, for the second life one-half the sum taken for the first, and for the third one-half the sum taken for the second, &c.; the result of which will be, that, however great the number of trustees admitted, the amount of the whole fine will never be double of that paid upon the first life (a). And on every change of trustees the same fine is demandable, even where some of the surrenderees are the survivors of the old trustees, for they take a new estate (b). In order to avoid these onerous fines, where the estate devolves on several trustees, all the trustees but one may disclaim or release to that one, who can then be admitted, and the lord can then claim only a single fine (c). But there may be some risk in adopting this course otherwise than with the sanction of the Court, since to vest the legal estate in one trustee alone must in strictness be viewed as a breach of trust, and the expected pecuniary advantage might, by the early death of the trustee who is admitted in the lifetime of his co-trustees, be turned into a loss, and then the trustees might be held liable for the detriment to the trust estate. The last contingency might be guarded against by an insurance, effected either at an annual premium or for a gross sum payable in advance. But besides this, where discretionary powers are annexed to the trusteeship, the severance of the estate from the ordinary devolution of the trust might affect the powers; as, if a power of sale be given to the heir of the survivor, and A. is admitted and B. survives, can the heir [or legal personal representative (d)] of B. sell? (e).

Where a copyhold has been surrendered to several trustees, there can be no disclaimer by one trustee, for the purpose of vesting the entire estate in the co-trustees, where that one trustee, by having acted as owner, has virtually accepted the estate (a). And where a testator devised to three trustees, whom he appointed executors, and one disclaimed and the two others proved the will, but, wishing to escape the double fine, put forward the heir to be admitted as the person upon whom the estate descended until the devisees were admitted, it was held that the lord was justified in refusing to admit the heir; and the Court, in the exercise of its discretionary power, would not issue a mandamus to compel him (b). But in the same case, the lord having made the usual proclamation, and the heir having tendered himself for admission, and the lord having refused to admit him on the ground that the estate was in the devisees, who refused to come in, it was ruled that, as the devisees had no title until admittance and the estate descended to the heir, the lord was not justified in seizing for want of a tenant (c). Disclaimer to avoid a fine.

29. Though the manorial burdens in respect of copyholds fall upon the trustee personally at law, he is of course entitled in equity to reimburse himself the expenditure out of the trust estate (d). Reimbursement.

30. The trustee of a leasehold estate is liable upon the covenants of the lease just as if he were the real owner (e). But the trust estate must indemnify him in equity. [It is the duty of a trustee of a leasehold property to keep it free from the risk of forfeiture; and for that purpose he is entitled to have the covenants in the lease performed out of the rents of the property which come to his hands, and is not bound to be satisfied with an indemnity against the consequences of a breach of the covenants. And where a tenant for life of leasehold houses had been allowed by the trustees to receive the rents and profits, and the houses had not been kept in a proper state of repair, the Court, at the instance of one of the trustees, appointed a receiver (f). But this case turned upon the special wording of the will, and did not lay down any general principle as to the mutual rights of tenants for life and remaindermen, and in the absence of any directions in the will there is no obligation on a tenant for life Trustee of leaseholds.

If trustee trade in that character, he is amenable to the bankrupt laws.

31. If a trustee carry on a trade in the due execution of his trust, he makes himself amenable to the operation of the bankrupt law in the same manner as if he had traded on his own account (b), and the debts contracted by him in such trade are not debts of the testator, but his own debts (c), and on his decease his lands, as those of a trader, were liable under Sir Samuel Romilly's Act (d) to the discharge of simple contract debts (e); and now, by 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104, the lands of all persons, traders or otherwise, are liable to their simple contract debts; and by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 46, simple contract debts are payable pari passu with specialty debts. But an executor carrying on a business in pursuance of the directions of a will, is entitled to be indemnified out of the estate, as against the persons claiming under the will, though not as against creditors who claim paramount to the will (f).

32. If trustees be holders of shares in a company, their liabilities are the same as if they were the beneficial owners, though the fact of their trusteeship be noticed in the company's books (g); [and they cannot say that their liability is to be only a liability to the extent of the estate of their testator (h).]

Assignees take differently from heirs and executors.

2. The operation of the Bankruptcy Acts was thus commented upon by Lord Chief Justice Willes: "The assignees under a commission of bankruptcy, are not to be considered as general assignees of all the real and personal estate of which the bankrupt was seised and possessed, as heirs and executors are of the estate of their ancestors and testators, for nothing vests in the assignees even at law but such real and personal estate of the bankrupt in which he had the equitable as well as legal interest, and which is to be applied to the payment of the bankrupt's debts" (a).

The trust estate does not pass to the trustees in bankruptcy of the trustee.

3. It is clear, therefore, that in the case of a bare trust, the property, whether real (b) or personal (c), did not vest by the bankruptcy in the assignees, even at law. And the proposition applies not only to express trustees, but also to trustees virtute officii, as executors, administrators (d), factors (e), &c.; and by the recent Bankruptcy Acts (f) it is expressly enacted that the bankrupt's property shall not be taken to comprise property held by the bankrupt in trust for any other person.

Nor the property into which the trust estate has been converted.

4. Where the trust estate or fund has been converted into property of a different character, the new acquisition will equally be protected against the effects of the bankruptcy; for the product or substitute of the original thing must follow the nature of the thing from which it proceeded (g). a factor be sold by him and reduced into money, so long as the money can be identified, as, where it has been kept in a bag, the employer, and not the creditors, will have the benefit of that specific sum (a). When money is said to have no ear-mark, the meaning is no more than this, that, being the currency of the country, it cannot be followed when once it has passed in circulation (b).

[Harris v. Truman.]

[5. So where money was paid into a bank by a firm of brewers, and an agent was allowed to draw upon the account in order to provide himself with funds for purchasing barley to be malted for the brewers, and the agent bought large quantities of barley, and also (although not authorized so to do) of malt, and drew largely upon the account, but in lieu of paying for the barley and malt, misappropriated the moneys which he received and subsequently became a bankrupt, it was held (1) that the moneys drawn out by the agent were impressed with a trust under which he was bound to appropriate them in the cash purchase of barley; (2) that even if the barley and malt which remained at the time of the bankruptcy in his possession were not bought in accordance with the authority given to him, and the legal property in them was not in the brewers but in the agent, he was a trustee of them for the brewers to the extent of the moneys advanced by the brewers, for they were the product of or substitute for the original trust property, and as such subject to the trust; and (3) that the bankrupt or his representative could not be allowed to set up the bankrupt's fraud and abuse of trust to defeat the title of his cestui que trust (c).]

Factor selling and taking notes.

6. So, if the factor sell the goods and take notes in payment, the value of the notes, notwithstanding the bankruptcy, may be recovered by action from the creditors' trustee (d); for, though negotiable securities are said, like money, to have no ear-mark, the expression does not intend that such securities in the hands of a bankrupt have run into the general mass of his property, and pass to his creditors, but only that negotiable securities, as a circulating medium in lieu of money, cannot be recovered from a person to whom they have been legally negotiated (e).

Factor selling for money payable at a future day.

7. So, if a factor sell the goods of his employer for money payable at a future day, and become bankrupt, and the creditors' trustee receives the money, he will be answerable for it to the merchant by whom the factor was employed (a).

Tortious conversion of the trust property.

8. In another case the conversion had been in breach of the factor's duty (b); and it was argued that, as the principal would not have been bound to accept the property which the agent had wrongfully purchased, the Court ought not to give a lien to the principal upon the tortious acquisition; but the Court said, it was impossible that an abuse of trust could confer any right on the person abusing it, or those claiming in privity with him (c).

Stockbroker selling.

[9. So, if a trustee employ a stockbroker to sell out consols and invest the proceeds on behalf of the trust estate, the money arising from the sale is trust money, and may be followed into the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy of the broker (d). And where money was borrowed for the purpose of purchasing a specific property which was to be mortgaged to secure the loan, and the borrower in lieu of applying the money for the specific purpose paid it into a bank and drew upon it, and subsequently became bankrupt, it was held that the lender could follow and claim so much of the money as remained in the bank unapplied (e).]

In whose name actions must be brought to recover the trust estate from the creditors' trustee.

10. Where the legal property does not pass, any action against the creditors' trustee must be brought by the bankrupt himself, for he is the person possessed of the legal right (f); but, in the case of a factor, an action may also be brought by the principal, for the absolute property remains with the employer, and a special property only vests in the agent (g). But, if bills be remitted to a factor, and made payable to him or his order, it has been doubted whether the property does not so vest in the factor, that no action of trover can be maintained by the principal (h).

Where the trust estate has become amalgamated with the trustee's other property, the cestui que trust must prove for the amount.

that it can no longer be identified, the representative of the trust has then no other remedy but to come in as a general creditor and prove for the amount of the loss (a). But, in one case, though the trust money had got into the general fund, it was held, but under very particular circumstances, to have subsequently got out again (b).

Case of a bankrupt trustee having a beneficial interest.

12. As a general rule, where the bankrupt has a substantial beneficial interest, however small, in property legally vested in him, such property passes to the trustee, who takes as trustee for the creditors and other parties interested (c). It is conceived, however, that the rule would not apply to a case where a bankrupt is expressly a trustee, though he may himself have some partial beneficial interest, for his act ought not to work a prejudice to others, and as a conveyance by the bankrupt himself to a stranger would be a breach of trust, it can hardly be supposed that the Bankruptcy Act could be construed to have a similar tortious effect (d). Where the trust is constructive and the equity doubtful, the Court has sometimes directed the trustee to concur in conveying (e). And where the legal property passes, the cestuis que trust may have the same relief in equity against the creditors' trustee, as they would have been entitled to against the bankrupt himself (f).

Of trust chattels left in the possession of the bankrupt trustee.

owner, under such circumstances that he is the reputed owner thereof." Thus, although all persons (traders or not) can now be made bankrupts, only those engaged in some trade or business come under the operation of the order and disposition clause; and, as it would seem, then only as to goods affected by such trade or business. The same section also provides that "things in action other than debts due or growing due to the bankrupt in the course of his trade or business shall not be deemed goods within the meaning of the section" (a).

It should be observed that this section differs from the corresponding section in the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (b), which applied to the goods in the order and disposition of the bankrupt trader, whether in his trade or business or not (c). Under these sections it was at one time considered that shares in companies were not things in action within the Acts (d); but this view has been overruled in the House of Lords (e), and it has also been held that debentures of a company, by which they undertake to pay a sum of money and interest, and charge their undertaking and property with the payment thereof (f), and policies of life assurance (g), and equitable interests in shares which are registered in the names of other persons (h), are such things in action.]

No forfeiture where they are in his possession according to the title.

It has been decided under the corresponding clause in the previous Bankruptcy Acts, that the enactment does not apply where the possession of the goods by the bankrupt can be satisfactorily accounted for by the circumstances of the title, as, if a trustee be in possession of effects upon trust for payment of debts, and become bankrupt (i), or if goods be vested in A. upon trust to permit B. to have the enjoyment during his life, and B. becomes bankrupt while in possession under his equitable title (j); or if A. for valuable consideration assign his goods to a trustee for A.'s wife for her separate use, and the goods are in the house occupied by A. and his wife at the date of his bankruptcy (a). [So property which belongs to a married woman for her separate use, but as to which the husband, by reason of there being no other trustee, is a trustee for the wife, does not pass to his trustee in bankruptcy (b); and farming stock of a testator left in the hands of the widow as tenant for life under the will was, under the circumstances of the case, held to be sufficiently ear-marked as trust property so that only the life-interest passed to the trustee in bankruptcy (c).] But if a residue be given to trustees upon trust to sell with all convenient speed, and to invest the proceds in the purchase of an annuity for the lives of A. (one of the trustees) and her children, the amount to be paid to A. for the benefit of the children, and if instead of selling the trustees permit A. to retain possession for a length of time, the goods are forfeited, such possession being contrary to the title (d).

Executors and administrators

14. The enactment does not extend to a lawful and necessary possession en auter droit, as that by executors and administrators (e); but there will be no exemption from the forfeiture if the executor can be proved to have dismissed the character of personal representative, and to have assumed that of absolute owner (f).

Factors.

15. So goods in the possession of factors, in the ordinary course of their trade, are not forfeitable under the clause (g).

Reversions.

16. The forfeiture clause affects interests in reversion as well as in possession (h), though such interests are contingent (i), and the circumstance that notice was given to the trustee, after the bankruptcy, but before the appointment of assignees in bankruptcy, has been held not to prevent the operation of the Act (j).

Deposits.

17. Under the old Bankruptcy Acts, no forfeiture was incurred where the security for a chose en action, as a policy, was deposited with a banker, not by way of equitable assignment so as to give the banker a right to receive the money, but by way of lien, so as to disable the bankrupt from receiving the money (a). But the case was otherwise where the depositee had a right conferred upon him to receive the money, for then the chose en action was forfeited (b).

Ignorance.

18. The clause has been held not to apply where the true owner was ignorant of his being such, for if he did not know that he was the true owner, how could he have given any consent as such (c). And where the bankrupt held in trust for a corporation which had no power to possess such property, it was ruled that the corporation, being a mere abstraction of law, and incapable of action beyond the limits of its own legal powers, could not consent as true owner (d).

Whether bare trustee a "true owner."

19. Whether the permission of a bare trustee can be said to be that of the "true owner," to the prejudice of his innocent cestuis que trust is a question of some difficulty (e). It has been decided that a cestui que trust absolutely entitled is a true owner within the meaning of the Act (f). But here the trustee is a mere passive depositary, and can do no act without the direction of his cestui que trust (g); but the case is different, where, as in a marriage settlement, a fund is vested in trustees in trust for persons under disability or not in existence, and it is therefore intended that they should act on behalf of all parties as the absolute proprietors. It would seem that here the trustees are regarded as the true owners, and that if the funds are left by the trustees in the order and disposition of the bankrupt, they are so left with the consent of the true owners (h).

Of judgments against the trustee.

20. Judgments, at least so far as they affect lands (for execution against goods and chattels is by common law), derive their origin from certain statutory enactments (i).

Had trusts been established at the time when these statutes were passed, the construction would probably have been the same as in the case of the Bankruptcy Acts, that is, judgments would have been held to bind those lands only of which the conusee was seised beneficially; but trusts at the period of which we are speaking had not made their appearance, and therefore judgments have been held to bind all lands of the conusee, whether vested in him beneficially, or in the character of trustee. But of course the cestui que trust will be protected from the legal process by application to a Court of equity (a).

[Garnishee order.]

[21. A garnishee order nisi to attach a debt due to a trustee will not be made absolute, if a primâ facie case be made out that the money sought to be attached is trust money, but the money will be ordered into Court to abide the event of an inquiry whether it be trust money or not (b).]

SECTION III.

WHAT PERSONS TAKING THE LEGAL ESTATE WILL BE BOUND BY THE TRUST.

General rule.

1. The universal rule, as trusts are now regulated, is, that all persons who take through or under the trustee (except purchasers for valuable consideration without notice), shall be liable to the trust.

Heir and executor bound by the trust.

2. On the death of the trustee, the heir (c), executor, or administrator, becomes the legal owner of the property; but as he merely represents the ancestor, testator, or intestate, he takes in the same character, and is therefore bound by the same equity.

So the devisee.

3. So, if a trustee devise the estate, the devisee takes the estate subject to the trust (d).

And assigns by act inter vivos.

4. So all assigns of the trust by acts inter vivos (except purchasers for valuable consideration without notice), will be bound by the trust (e).

So assigns in the post.

5. Assigns in the post, or by operation of law, are also invested with the character of trustees; as if a trustee marry, the wife is at law entitled to her dower, and if a female trustee marry, the husband is at law entitled to his curtesy, but in equity both the dowress (a) and tenant by the curtesy (b) are compellable to recognise the right of the cestui que trust. So a creditor of the trustee extending the trust estate under an elegit (c), or taking a trust chattel by writ of execution (d), and by the same rule the creditors' trustee under a bankruptcy (e) are made subject to the equity.

6. And if the trustee commit a forfeiture, the lord, as he succeeds to the identical estate of the forfeitor, must take the property with all the engagements and incumbrances attached to it, and is therefore liable to the trust (f). In the case of a forfeiture to the Crown, it was formerly held that there was no equity against the Crown (g); but in modern times the equity was admitted, though the precise nature of the remedy was never distinctly ascertained (h). Forfeiture.

7. A lord taking by escheat stands on a somewhat different footing, for he does not take through or under the trustee at all; he is not an assign of the trustee either in the per or post; nor does he, as in forfeiture, succeed to the place of the trustee, but Escheat.

In the case of Whitworth v. Gaugain, 1 Cr. & Ph. 325, where a person made a deposit of title deeds, and then a judgment was entered up against him, Lord Cottenham expressed a doubt whether the judgment creditor, if he had no notice, would be bound by the prior equity. However, such a doctrine was not tenable, for a judgment creditor is not a purchaser for valuable consideration. Brace v. Duchess of Marlborough, 2 P. W. 491. He advances money, but not on the security of this estate. He may take the person of his debtor, or his goods and chattels, and if he is put in possession of the lands, it is not as purchaser of them, but by course of law. The cause was afterwards heard, and Lord Cottenham's doubts were displaced by a decision the other way, 3 Hare, 416; 1 Ph. 728. In Watts v. Porter, 3 Ell. & Bl. 743, three of the four judges, while approving of Whitworth v. Gaugain, refused to apply the principle of it to a case of stock. The remaining judge differed, and held that in personal, as in real estate, the specific incumbrancer, though he gives no notice to the trustee, prevails over the judgment creditor, though he has obtained a charging order. It is conceived that the single judge took the clearer view. Those who determined the other way, seem to have assumed that notice was necessary for the transfer of an equitable interest, which is not true as between assignor and assignee, but only as between two contending assignees. The case of Watts v. Porter has since been disapproved by the highest authorities, Beavan v. Lord Oxford, 6 De G. claims by a title paramount of his own, by virtue of a condition originally annexed to the land, and wholly independent of the creation of the trust.

Burgess v. Wheate.

Lord Mansfield was of opinion, however, in Burgess v. Wheate (a), that a trust ought to be binding on the lord, and cited the opinions said to have been expressed by Lord Chief Justice Bridgman and Sir John Trevor (b); but as to the words attributed to the former, it appears from his own note-book, that they were never spoken (c); and the observation of Sir John Trevor was at the utmost a mere obiter dictum. Sir Thomas Clarke, on the other hand, who assisted Lord Mansfield in the case of Burgess v. Wheate, thought that cestui qui trust was no more relievable against the lord by escheat, than against a sale by the trustee to a purchaser without notice (d); and Lord Northington's inclination was apparently the same way, though, as the point was not necessarily involved in the question before him, he declined to conclude himself by any express and direct opinion (e). It is clear that the lord was not bound by a use. However, it must be admitted that in modern times the Courts have acted on more liberal principles; and it has been actually decided that where the fee out of which a mortgage term has been carved escheats to the lord, he may redeem (f), and if the lord may take a benefit through the tenant, it seems to follow that he must sustain an onus. Indeed, an opinion to that effect has been enunciated by Lord Justice James when Vice-Chancellor (g), and also by an equity court in Ireland (h). Now that the Acts, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, [and 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41,] (to be noticed presently), have been passed, it is unlikely that the point will ever call for a decision.

Copyholds.

8. In copyholds there is, properly speaking, no such thing as escheat. The freehold and inheritance are vested in the lord of the manor, and the tenant has no claim but according to the entry on the court roll. If the tenant be a trustee, and no trust appears on the roll, there can be no pretence for charging the lord with an equity to which he never assented (a); but if a surrender be made upon a trust either expressed or referred to on the roll, the lord is stopped by this evidence of his will, and cannot afterwards claim in contradiction to his grant (b).

Customary freeholds.

9. Customary freeholds held not at the will of the lord, but according to the custom of the manor, stand on the same footing as copyholds in reference to escheat (c), for it is now established that customary freeholds are in fact copyholds, but of a privileged character (d).

Equity of redemption.

10. A distinction was taken by Lord Hale between a trust and an equity of redemption. "A trust," said his Lordship, "is created by the contract of the party, and he may direct it as he pleaseth, and he may provide for the execution of it, and therefore one that comes in in the post shall not be liable to it without express mention made by the party; and the rules for executing a trust have often varied, and therefore they only are bound by it who come in in privity of estate; but a power of redemption is an equitable right inherent in the land, and binds all persons in the post or otherwise (e), because it is an ancient right which the party is entitled to in equity" (f). But upon this distinction it must be observed, that even a trust will at the present day bind persons who take derivatively from the trustee, though in the post; and notwithstanding an equity of redemption amounts to what Lord Hale calls a title (g), there seems to be no reason why in the case of escheat the lord, who takes by title paramount, should be bound by an equity of redemption any more than by a simple trust (h). In a later case (i), however, the distinction between an equity of redemption and a trust was observed upon, and the Court expressed an opinion that a lord who was in by escheat would be bound by an equity of redemption, if not by a trust (a).

Real estate assets in hands of assign or lord taking by escheat.

11. The 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104 (which subjects a person's real estate to the payment of his simple contract debts), annexes the quality of assets to the estate itself (b), and subject to the right of alienation by the heir or devisee (c), creates a charge on the estate for the benefit of the creditors (d); and it has been held that a debtor's estate is assets, [in the hands of a voluntary assign of the heir or devisee (e), and] even in the hands of the lord taking by escheat (f).

13 & 14 Vict. c. 60.

12. The law relating to the forfeiture and escheat of trust estates, except so far as it illustrates general principles, has now, by the interference of the Legislature, become of little importance; for by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 60, it is enacted in effect, by sect. 15, that in case of failure of heirs of a trustee, the Court of Chancery shall have power, upon summary application, to transfer the legal estate (g); and by sect. 46, the trust property shall not escheat or be forfeited by reason of the attainder or conviction for any offence of the trustee; [and by 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 30, in the case of the death of a trustee after the 31st December, 1881, the legal estate in realty devolves upon the legal personal representative of the trustee (h), and may be disposed of and dealt with by him as if it were a chattel real.]

Outlawry of the trustee.

13. If a trustee be outlawed for treason or felony, the outlawry amounts to conviction (i), and the ordinary consequences of forfeiture or escheat (j) are averted by the above Act. merely of a contempt of Court (a), punishable with forfeiture of the life rent of the outlaw's lands, and of his chattels, real and personal, absolutely, and in this case, therefore, the statute does not apply.

A disseisor not bound by the trust.

14. A disseisor is not an assign of the trustee either in the per or post, for he does not claim through or under the trustee, but holds by a wrongful title of his own, and adversely to the trust. The first resolution in Sir Moyle Finch's case was, that "a disseisor was subject to no trust, nor any subpœna was maintainable against him, not only because he was not in the post, but because the right of inheritance or freehold was determinable at the common law, and not in Chancery, neither had the cestui que trust (while he had his being) any remedy in that case" (b). And we may add the authority of Lord St. Leonards, who, in his edition of Gilbert on Uses, observes, "At this day every one is bound by a trust who obtains the estate without a valuable consideration, or even for a valuable consideration if with notice, unless perhaps the lord by escheat. But persons claiming the legal estate by an actual disseisin, without collusion with the trustee, will not be bound by the trust. Therefore, if I oust A., who is a trustee for B., and a claim is not made in due time, A. will be barred, and his cestui que trust with him, although I had notice of the trust" (c) (1). And the same thing may be inferred from the terms of the section of the Statute of Limitations relating to express trusts (d).

CHAPTER XIII.

GENERAL PROPERTIES OF THE OFFICE OF TRUSTEE.

From the estate of the trustee we pass on to the consideration of his office, and upon this subject we shall, in the first place, investigate the general properties of the office, as, First. A trustee having once accepted the trust cannot afterwards renounce it. Secondly. He cannot delegate it. Thirdly. In the case of co-trustees the office must be exercised by all the trustees jointly. Fourthly. On the death of one trustee there is survivorship, that is, the trust will pass to the survivors or survivor. Fifthly. One trustee shall not be liable for the acts of his co-trustee. Sixthly. A trustee shall derive no personal benefit from the trusteeship.

First. A trustee who has accepted the trust cannot afterwards renounce.

Trustee cannot renounce after acceptance.

1. It is a rule, without any exception, that a person who has once undertaken the office, either by actual or constructive acceptance, cannot discharge himself from liability by a subsequent renunciation. The only mode by which he can obtain a release is either under the sanction of a Court of Equity, or by virtue of a special power in the instrument creating the trust, [or of a statutory power (a)], or with the consent of all the parties interested in the estate and being sui juris (b).

Executor cannot renounce after he has acted.

Thus, where A. was named executor, and acted in behalf of some particular legatees, but disclaimed the intention of interfering generally, and then renounced, and B. obtained letters of administration cum testamento annexo, and possessed himself of assets, and died insolvent, it was held that A., having acted, could not afterwards discharge himself, and was responsible for the devastavit committed by B. (c).

[(a) See 44 & 45 Vict. c. 51, ss. 31, 32.]

(c) Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 231; see Lowry v. Fulton, 9 Sim. 123.

2. Though a trustee may have given a bond for the due execution of the trust, and the cestui que trust may have recovered upon the bond, and been paid the money, yet, if the cestui que trust afterwards take proceedings to compel a conveyance of the trust estate, the trustee cannot divest himself of his fiduciary character by pleading that the penalty of the bond was a stated damage for the breach of trust, and that on payment of the penalty the trustee should be released. A conveyance, however, will not be decreed without an allowance to the trustee of the penalty recovered upon the bond, with the interest at the usual rate (a). Moorecroft v. Dowding.

Secondly. The office of trustee, being one of personal confidence, cannot be delegated.

1. "Trustees," said Lord Langdale, "who take on themselves the management of property for the benefit of others, have no right to shift their duty on other persons; and if they do so they remain subject to responsibility towards their cestuis que trust for whom they have undertaken the duty" (b). If a trustee, therefore, confide the application of the trust fund to the care of another, whether a stranger (c), or his own attorney or solicitor (d), or even co-trustee or co-executor (e), he will be personally responsible for any loss that may result (f). But trustees were held not Trustee cannot delegate the office.

[(f) But in the ordinary course of business trustees may employ brokers and solicitors as their agents without being liable for their acts. "A trustee," said L. J. Lindley, "has no business to cast upon brokers, or solicitors, or anybody else, the duty of performing to be responsible where they drew a cheque and delivered it to a co-trustee, but crossed with the names of bankers to whom the money was meant to be paid, and to whom it was payable in the due execution of the trust, and the co-trustee (as the Court assumed) erased the crossing and received the money himself; for such a receipt was a fraud on the trustees, and not the result of any act of theirs (a). [But where it was the duty of executors to purchase stock, and in lieu thereof a cheque was drawn in favour of the legatee, and the money was lost by the fraud of one executor, his co-executor was held liable (b).]

Balchen v. Scott.

2. The case of Balchen v. Scott (c), is no exception to the general rule; for there an executor had received a bill of exchange by the post from a debtor to the estate, and transmitted it to his co-executor, and it was held, that by this proceeding the executor had not acted in the trust (d), and therefore was no more answerable for the application of the money by the co-executor, than any stranger would have been under similar circumstances.

Churchill v. Hobson.

3. In Churchill v. Hobson (e), an executor had paid 500*l.* into the hands of his co-executor, who misapplied it, and it was ruled by the Court that he was not bound to make it good; but the decision is universally considered as having turned upon the circumstance that the co-executor was a banker, and had been trusted by the testator in his lifetime, besides being made his executor at his death (f). Lord Harcourt, in his judgment, observed, "The co-executor having been the cashier with whom the testator in his lifetime chose to intrust his money, the those trusts and exercising that judgment and discretion which he is bound to perform and exercise himself. On the other hand a trustee is not bound to do everything himself. A trustee is entitled to employ brokers and solicitors to do that which in the ordinary course of business other people would employ brokers and solicitors to do;" and in the same case, L. J. Bowen said, "The proposition as to trustees and agents that they cannot delegate means this simply —that a man employed to do a thing himself has not the right to get somebody else to do it, but when he is employed to get it done through others he may do so." Re Speight, 22 Ch. Div. 727, 756, 763; 9 App. Cas. 1. [(b) Re Bennison, 60 L. T. N.S. 859.]

(d) As the executor had proved the will he would be deemed at the present day to have accepted the trust. See ante, p. 211.

(e) 1 P. W. 241.

executor ought not to suffer for having trusted him whom the testator himself in his life trusted."

Trustee may delegate by testator's direction.

4. But trustees cannot be answerable, if they merely follow the testator's directions. Thus a testator by his will recommended his executors to employ A. (who had been in the testator's own employment) as their clerk or agent. The executors gave A. a power of attorney to receive debts, and A. subsequently became insolvent. It was contended that the executors were answerable for the default of A., but Sir A. Hart said that if a testator pointed out an agent to be employed by the executor, and such employee received a sum of money, and immediately made default, the executor would clear himself by showing that the testator designated the person, and that he could not by the exercise of reasonable diligence recover the money (a).

Trustee acting as agent.

5. And an executor cannot be answerable for having handed over money which he had no legal right to retain. Thus, a testator appointed A., B, and C. his executors, and empowered one of them, A., to sell certain freehold premises, and directed the proceeds of the sale to be applied and disposed of in the same manner as his personal estate. A. employed B., as his agent, to make the sale, who, having disposed of the property, paid the proceeds to A., by whom the money was misapplied. It was held that B. was not answerable for this, the money having come to his hands, not in the character of executor, but of agent (b).

Delegation permitted where there is a moral necessity for it.

6. And trustees and executors may justify their administration of the trust fund by the instrumentality of others, where there exists a moral necessity for it. "There are," said Lord Hardwicke, "two sorts of necessity: first legal necessity; and secondly: moral necessity. As to the first a distinction prevails. Where two executors join in giving a discharge for money, and one of them only receives it, they are both answerable for it; because there is no necessity for both to join in the discharge, the receipt of either being sufficient: but if trustees join in giving a discharge, and only one receives, the other is not answerable, because his joining in the discharge was necessary. Moral necessity is from the usage of mankind, if the trustee acts as prudently for the trust as he would have done for himself, and according to the usage of business; as if a trustee appoint rents to be paid to a banker at that time in credit, but who afterwards breaks, the trustee is not answerable; so in the employment of stewards and agents: for none of these cases are on account of necessity, but because the persons acted in the usual method of business" (a). And Lord Loughborough in very similar terms observed, "If the business was transacted in the ordinary manner, unless there were some circumstances to create suspicion, surely the allowance is fair" (b). "Necessity," said Lord Cottenham, "which includes the regular course of business, will exonerate" (c). And Lord Redesdale, in the same spirit observed, "An executor living in London is to pay debts in Suffolk, and remits money to his co-executor to pay those debts: he is considered to do this of necessity: he could not transact business without trusting some person, and it would be impossible for him to discharge his duty, if he is made responsible where he remitted money to a person to whom he would himself have given credit, and would in his own business have remitted money in the same way" (d). [And Lord Watson in a recent case in the House of Lords (e) observed, "Whilst trustees cannot delegate the execution of the trust, they may, as was held by this House in Speight v. Gaunt (f), avail themselves of the services of others wherever such employment is according to the usual course of business."]

[(e) Learoyd v. Whiteley, 12 App. Cas. at p. 734; see Blyth v. Fladgate, (1891), 1 Ch. 337, 360. "A trustee is bound to exercise discretion in the choice of his agents, but so long as he selects persons properly qualified he cannot be made responsible for their intelligence or their honesty. He does not in any sense guarantee the performance of their duties. It does not, however, follow that he can intrust his agents with any duties which they are willing to undertake, or pay them or agree to pay them any remuneration which they see fit to demand. The trustee must consider these matters for himself, and the Court would be disposed to support any conclusion at which he arrives, however erroneous, provided it is his conclusion—that is, the outcome of such consideration as might reasonably be expected to be given to a like matter by a man of ordinary prudence, guided by such rules and arguments as generally guide such a man in his own affairs," per Kekewich, J., Re Weall, 42 Ch. D. at p. 678, citing Speight v. Gaunt, 9 App. Cas. 1.]

who undertook to affix his signature, and deliver them to the creditors, and B. accordingly signed the cheques, and placed them in his desk, whence they were stolen, and presented at the bank, and paid; on an application to the Court to make A. answerable, Sir J. Leach was of opinion that the delivery of the cheques by A. to B. as his co-assignee, was an act done of necessity in the course of business, and that he was not responsible for the subsequent loss of the cheques (a).

[So where a trustee desiring to invest trust funds employed a broker in the ordinary course of business, to purchase securities authorized by the trust, and on the receipt of the bought note handed over a cheque for the purchase-money to the broker, who misappropriated it, the trustee was not liable to make good the loss (b). But a trustee negotiating with a municipal corporation through a broker, for a direct loan to them, would not be justified in handing over the money to the broker for payment to the corporation, for "there would be no moral necessity or sufficient practical reason from the usage of mankind or otherwise," to justify such a course (c).] [Re Speight.]

7. But where the assignees of a bankrupt employed an attorney to recover debts due to the estate, and the attorney brought actions and received the money and absconded, Sir A. Hart held them accountable on the ground that there was no necessity for permitting the attorney to receive one shilling of the money recovered further than his costs, and laid it down, that if the attorney received the money one day and became insolvent the next, the assignee would be liable. And his Lordship said the same point had been decided in an unreported case before Lord Eldon (d). Trustees undoubtedly must not let the money lie in the hands of the attorney, but that they must not suffer it to pass through his hands in the ordinary course of business, in the recovery of a debt by action, was beyond any previous decision; unless, as suggested, it had been so ruled by Lord Eldon. However, we have here the authority of Sir A. Hart, that the plaintiffs' attorney in an action cannot virtute officii sign a discharge, and that if the plaintiffs empower him to receive the amount recovered, they are answerable for his receipts as for the act of an agent improperly appointed to sign such receipt. Trustee not to require security from his agent.

8. A trustee or executor is not called upon to take any security from the agent; for to do that upon every occasion would tend greatly to the hindrance of business (a).

[If a trustee employs an agent under circumstances which justify the employment, and a loss arises from the insolvency of the agent, the onus is on the persons seeking to make the trustee liable for the loss, to show that it was attributable to the default of the trustee (b).]

How trust money to be transmitted.

9. Where trust money is to be transmitted to a distance, the trustee may do it most conveniently and securely through the medium of a responsible bank, or he may take bills drawn by a person of undoubted credit, and payable at the place whither the money is to be sent (c).

Payments into bank must be to the account of the trust.

10. But the money must be paid in to the account of the trust estate, and the bills must be taken in favour of the trustee in that character, and if he neglect these precautions, then, if the bank break, or the bills be dishonoured, the trustee will be liable for the loss to the cestuis qui trust (d).

Rule at law as to liability of executors.

11. The rule formerly applied to executors in a Court of law seems to have been somewhat different from that established in Courts of Equity. An executor once become responsible by actual receipt of any part of the assets could not at law have founded his discharge in respect thereof as against a creditor, either by a plea of reasonable confidence disappointed, or a loss not occasioned by any negligence or default; as if an executor transmitted a sum to his co-executor under circumstances that in equity would have justified the confidence, a Court of law would still have held him responsible for any misapplication by the co-executor, and could not allow him to plead plene administravit (e). But now that [the rules of equity prevail over the rules of the common law where they conflict, the distinction has disappeared (f).]

Delegation of a discretionary trust.

12. If the trust be of a discretionary character, not only is the trustee answerable for all the mischievous consequences of the delegation, but the exercise of the discretion by the substitute will be actually void (a).

Thus an advowson was vested in twenty-five of the principal inhabitants of a parish upon trust to elect and present a proper preacher, and some of the trustees having deputed proxies to vote at the election, Lord Hardwicke held that, as the election had been conducted in this manner, it could not be supported (b).

[Trustees may however enquire what are the wishes and opinions of others, especially of those who are interested, before finally determining what in the exercise of their own discretion they think expedient, and will not be held to act against their own judgment, if they should in the end disregard objections to which they had previously given weight (c).]

Not permitted, though to a co-trustee.

13. And a discretionary trust can no more be delegated to a co-executor or co-trustee than to a stranger (d). Thus, where a sum of money was given to three executors upon trust to distribute in charity at their own discretion, and the executors assumed each the independent control of one-third, Lord Hardwicke said, "I am of opinion the executors could not divide the charity into three parts, and each executor nominate a third absolutely, because the determination of the property of every object was left by the testator to the direction of all the executors" (e).

Transfer of the trust estate does not transfer the power.

14. Of course if a trustee convey the estate, the mere transfer of the estate will not have the effect of carrying with it the trust or power to the grantee (f). And so if a trustee devise the estate, the devisee cannot administer a discretionary trust unless the original settlement contemplated such an event, and by vesting the powers in the trustee and his assigns annexed the powers to the estate in the hands of the devisee (g).

Delegation distinguished from appointment of a proxy.

15. It must be noticed that the appointment of an attorney or proxy is not in all cases a delegation of the trust. When the trustee has resolved in his own mind in what manner to exercise his discretion, he cannot be said to delegate any part of the confidence if he merely execute the deed by attorney, or signify his will by proxy. Thus, in the case before cited (a) where the trust was to elect and present a proper clerk to a benefice, Lord Hardwicke had no doubt that so far as related to the mere act of presentation, the trustees, having themselves fixed upon the object, might have signed the presentation by proxy; "a trustee who had a legal estate might make an attorney to do legal acts."

[Appointment of surveyor.]

[16. Trustees who are exercising the statutory power of sale conferred by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, cannot appoint one of themselves to be the surveyor to value the land under the 9th section of the Act, for the appointment of a surveyor under that section is intended as a check on the action of the trustees (b).]

Thirdly. In the case of co-trustees the office is a joint one.

Trust a joint office.

1. Where the administration of the trust is vested in co-trustees, they all form as it were but one collective trustee, and therefore must execute the duties of the office in their joint capacity (c). It is not uncommon to hear one of several trustees spoken of as the acting trustee, but the Court knows no such distinction; all who accept the office are in the eyes of the law acting trustees. If any one refuse or be incapable to join, it is not competent for the others to proceed without him, but the administration of the trust must in that case devolve upon the Court (d). However, the act of one trustee done with the sanction and approval of a co-trustee may be regarded as the act of both (e). But such sanction or approval must be strictly proved (f).

[Notice of renewal.]

[2. Notice of an intention to exercise a right of renewal of a lease of property vested in several trustees is good if served upon one only of the trustees (g).]

Receipts.

3. A receipt for money must, in the absence of a receipt clause specially worded, receive the joint authentication of the whole body of trustees, and not of the majority merely, or it will not be valid (a). And therefore where the trustees are numerous, it is common in orders of the Court to insert a special direction that the moneys may be paid to any two or more of them (b).

All the trustees must prove.

4. Again, if a debtor to the trust become bankrupt, all the trustees should join in the proof (c), but under particular circumstances the Court will make an order for some of the trustees to prove, but even then the Court has occasionally inserted a direction that the dividends shall be payable to all the trustees (d).

Acknowledgment of debt by one trustee.

5. If a mortgage be made to two trustees so described and the statutory period elapse, an interim acknowledgment by one of the trustees will not prevent the operation of the Statute of Limitations in bar of redemption (e).

In public trusts the majority of the trustees may bind the rest.

6. Where there are several trustees, and the trust is of a public character, the act of the majority is held to be the act of the whole number (f); as where there were seven trustees and they met for the purpose of electing a schoolmaster, and at the meeting five of the trustees concurred in the appointment, but two dissented, the act of the majority was considered to bind the minority (g). But of course the act of the majority does not bind the minority, so far as the act is beyond the proper sphere of the duty of the trustees (h). [Nor can a majority, in the absence of express statutory authority, pass the legal estate which is vested in all (i).] And when a special power is given to trustees, it cannot be exercised by the majority only, but all must join (j). Now, by 32 & 33 Vict. c. 110, s. 12, it is enacted that a majority of charity trustees present at a meeting duly constituted, and voting, shall have and be deemed to have always had the same power of disposition over the charity property, as if it were the act of the whole body; and by the 13th section the majority of the charity trustees may, with the sanction of the charity commissioners, sue as if they were the sole trustees.

as in cases of charity, the Court sometimes, for greater convenience, annexes to the order a direction that part of them shall form a quorum.

[Enfranchisement of copyholds.]

[By the Copyhold Act, 1887 (a), sec. 40, where either the lords or tenants of copyholds are trustees, and one or more of such trustees shall be abroad, or incapable, or refuse to act, any proceedings necessary to be done by such trustees for effecting any enfranchisement under the Copyhold Acts may be done by the other trustee or trustees, as the case may be.]

Dividends and rents.

8. If stock be standing in the names of several co-trustees, then, as they are joint tenants, and the Bank does not recognise the trust, any one of them may receive the dividends, though all must join in the sale of the corpus; and the Court itself has occasionally directed the dividends of stock, standing under its control, to be paid to one of several trustees (b). And in the case of Bank annuities standing to the credit of trustees of a charity, the Court to prevent the necessity of recurring applications on changes of trustees, made an order for payment of the dividends "to the trustees or any two of them, or to other the trustees for the time being or any two of them" (c), and in another case for payment to the "trustees for the time being or one of them" (d). Where there are co-trustees of lands, any one of them may receive the rents, though all must concur in a conveyance (e). But if there be two trustees, and one of them receives the rents and misapplies them, and the other trustee has notice of this, it is the duty of such other trustee to serve a notice on the tenants not to pay their rents to the defaulting trustee alone, and if he omit to do this or to take the necessary steps for insuring the safety of the rents, as against the defaulting trustee, he will himself become liable (f).

Co-trustees should not sever in legal proceedings.

9. As co-trustees are a joint body, the Court requires them, unless under special circumstances, to defend a suit jointly, and if they sever, the extra costs thereby occasioned must be borne by the defaulting party (a). It is conceived that this rule, so strictly observed in Court, must not be lost sight of in transactions out of Court, and that co-trustees are bound, unless they can show good reason to the contrary, to act by the same solicitor and the same counsel. It would be a strange anomaly if four trustees were allowed only one solicitor and one counsel in Court, and four separate solicitors and four separate counsel out of Court. Every trustee should be prepared to act in harmony with his co-trustees, or he should not accept the office. It may be said that as each trustee is responsible for the due administration of the trust, he ought to be at liberty to employ a professional adviser of his own choosing, but this argument would a fortiori apply to so important a matter as the defence of a suit, and yet there the Court pays no attention to it.

Survivorship of the trust.

Fourthly. On the death of one trustee the joint office survives.

1. It is a well-known maxim that a bare authority committed to several persons is determined by the death of any one; but, if coupled with an interest, it passes to the survivors (b). Thus, the committees of a lunatic's estate are regarded in the light of mere bailiffs without a spark of interest, and if one of them die, the office is immediately extinguished (c). [And where under an order for maintenance two trustees were directed to pay the income of a trust fund to the mother of an infant for the maintenance of the infant during her minority, and one of the trustees died and the survivor continued the payments, it was held by the late M. R. that the trust for maintenance arose only under the order and did not survive (d). But this view was not acquiesced in by

D. 516, 518; and see Williams v. Wight, W. the Court of Appeal, where a distinction was drawn between a power and a positive direction involving no discretion (a).] But an executorship or administratorship survives (b); for "if," says Lord Talbot, "a joint estate at law will survive, why shall not a joint administration, when they both have a joint estate in it? (c). So a testamentary guardianship vests in the survivors (d), for, as guardians may bring actions and avow in their own names, may grant leases during the minority of the ward, and demise copyholds even in reversion as lords pro tempore, it is evident they have an interest (e). It follows that as co-trustees have an authority coupled with an estate or interest, their office also must be impressed with the quality of survivorship (f): as if land be vested in two trustees upon trust to sell and one of them dies, the other may sell (g); and if an adowson be conveyed to trustees upon trust to present a proper clerk, the survivors or survivor may present (h). Otherwise, indeed, the more precaution a person took by increasing the number of the trustees, the greater would be the chance of the abrupt determination of the trust by the death of any one. Even where the trust was to raise the sum of 2000*l.* out of the testator's estate "by sale or otherwise, at the discretion of his trustees, who should invest the same in the names of the said trustees upon trust," &c., and one of the two trustees died, and the survivor sold; Vice-Chancellor Wood decided that the survivor could make a good title. "I find," he said, "a clear estate in the vendor, and a clear duty to perform. Is it to be said that the sale is a breach of trust because the co-trustee is dead? If I were to lay down such a rule, it would come to this, that wherever an estate was vested in two or more trustees to raise a sum by sale or mortgage, you must come to the Court on the death of one of the trustees" (i).

(i) Lane v. Debenham, 11 Hare, 188;

Trust survives, though there be a power of appointment of new trustees.

2. The survivorship of the trust will not be defeated because the settlement contains a power for restoring the original number of trustees by new appointments (a): unless there be something in the instrument that specially manifests such an intention (b). Even in an Act of Parliament, which declared in very strong terms that the survivors should (c), and they were thereby required to appoint new trustees, the Court said the proviso was analogous to the common one in settlements, and expressed an opinion (for the decision was upon another point), that the clause was not imperative, but merely of a directory character (d).

Trustee not liable for his co-trustee.

Fifthly. One trustee shall not be liable for the acts or defaults of his co-trustee.

Townley v. Sherborne.

1. This canon appears to have been first established by the case of Townley v. Sherborne (f) in the reign of Charles the First.

A., B., C. and D. were trustees of some leasehold premises. A. and B. collected the rents during the first year and a half, and signed acquittances; but from that period the rents were uniformly received by an assign of C. The liability of A. and B. during the first year and a half was undisputed, but the question was raised whether they were not also chargeable with the rents which had accrued subsequently, but had never come to their hands. "The Lord Keeper Coventry" (says the reporter) "considered the case to be of great consequence, and thought not to determine the same suddenly, but to advise thereof, and desired the Lords the Judges Assistant to take the same into their serious consideration, whereby some course might be settled that parties trustees might not be too much punished, lest it should dishearten men to take any trust which would be inconvenient on the one side, nor that too much liberty should be given to parties trustees, lest they should be emboldened to break the trust imposed on them, and so be as much prejudicial on the other side. And the Lord Keeper and the Lords the Judges Assistant afterwards conferring together, and upon mature deliberation conceiving the case to be of great importance, his Lordship was pleased to call unto him also Mr. Justice Crook, Mr. Justice Barcley, and Mr. Justice Crawley, for their assistance also in the same, and appointed precedents to be looked over as well in the Court of Chancery as in other courts, if any could be found touching the point in question; whereupon several precedents were produced before them, some in the Court of Chancery and some in the Court of Wards, where parties trustees were chargeable only according to their several and respective receipts, and not one to answer for the other, but no precedent to the contrary was produced to them. Whereupon his Lordship, after long and mature deliberation on the case, and serious advice with all the said Judges, did this day in open Court declare the resolution of his Lordship and the said Judges—That where lands or leases were conveyed to two or more upon trust, and one of them receives all or the most part of the profits, and after dyeth or decayed in his estate, his co-trustee shall not be charged or be compelled in the Court of Chancery to answer for the receipts of him so dying or decayed, unless some practice, fraud, or evil dealing appear to have been in them to prejudice the trust; for they being by law joint tenants or tenants in common, every one by law may receive either all or as much of the profits as he can come by. It is no breach of trust to permit one of the trustees to receive all or the most part of the profits, it falling out many times that some of the trustees live far from the lands and are put in trust out of other respects than to be troubled with the receipt of the profits. But his Lordship and the said Judges did resolve, that if upon the proofs or circumstances the Court should be satisfied that there had been any dolus malus, or any evil practice, fraud, or ill intent in him that permitted his companion to receive the whole profits, he should be charged though he received nothing."

Trustee not liable for joining pro formâ in receipts.

2. Co-trustees (a), (as was determined in Townley v. Sherborne,) were formerly considered responsible for money if they joined in signing the receipt for it; but in later times the rule has been established, that a trustee who joins in a receipt for conformity, but without receiving, shall not be answerable for a misapplication by the trustee who receives (b). Where the administration of the trust is vested in co-trustees, a receipt for money paid to the account of the trust must be authenticated by the signature of all the trustees in their joint capacity, and it would be tyranny to punish a trustee for an act which the very nature of his office will not permit him to decline.

But he must prove that he did not actually receive.

3. But it lies upon a trustee who joins in a receipt to show that the money acknowledged to have been received by all was in fact received by the other or others, and that he himself joined only for conformity (a). In the absence of all evidence, the effect of a joint receipt is to charge each of the trustees in solido; as if a mortgage be devised to three trustees, and the mortgagor with his witness meets them to pay it off, and the money is laid on the table, and the mortgagor having obtained a reconveyance and receipt for his money, withdraws, each of the trustees in this case will be answerable for the whole (b). A joint receipt at law is conclusive evidence that the money came to the hands of both, but a Court of equity, which rejects estoppels and pursues truth, will decree according to the justice and verity of the fact (c). "Where," said Lord Cowper, "it cannot be distinguished how much was received by one trustee and how much by the other, it is like throwing corn or money into another man's heap, where there is no reason that he who made this difficulty should have the whole; on the contrary, because it cannot be distinguished he shall have no part" (d).

Trustee joining in a receipt must not permit the money to lie in the hands of the co-trustee.

4. And though a trustee joining in a receipt may be safe in merely permitting his co-trustee to receive in the first instance, yet he will not be justified in allowing the money to remain in his hands for a longer period than the circumstances of the case reasonably require (a). And it is the duty of a trustee not to rely on a mere statement by his co-trustee, that the money has been duly invested, but to ascertain that such is the fact (b). Two trustees authorised a co-trustee to remove from their bankers a box containing active Spanish stock, for the purpose of converting it into deferred Spanish stock, and the co-trustee after the conversion returned the box with only a part of the converted stock in it, and the trustees, who relied on the assurance of the co-trustee to their solicitor that all was right, and did not ascertain the fact, were held liable for the deferred stock which had been misappropriated (c).

Walker v. Symonds.

5. Walker v. Symonds (d) involved an unusual particularity of circumstances; but as Lord Eldon described it as a case of great importance to trustees in general (e), it may be useful to present a summary of it so far as it bears upon the present subject.

A sum of money secured by mortgage had been assigned to Donnithorne, Griffith, and Symonds, upon certain trusts. On 12th January, 1791, the mortgage was paid off and the estate re-conveyed, and a joint receipt signed, and the money, with the approbation of the co-trustees, was put into the hands of Donnithorne. The money was shortly afterwards invested by Donnithorne, with the sanction of his co-trustees, in bills or notes of the East India Company payable at the end of two years. In 1793 the bills were paid off by the Company, and the money received by Donnithorne. Intelligence to that effect having been transmitted to the co-trustees, Symonds the same year wrote to Donnithorne requesting him to invest it in the public funds in the joint names of the trustees. Donnithorne begged that the money might remain in his hands, and proposed to secure the repayment of it by a mortgage from himself and his son of their settled estates in Cornwall, and, until the mortgage could be prepared, to secure it by their joint bond. The co-trustees, conceiving the security to be ample, expressed their consent, and the joint bond was accordingly executed. Donnithorne not having sent the mortgage as he promised, Symonds made several applications to him upon the subject, earnestly desiring him either to invest the money in the funds, or to give them landed security. In September, 1796, Donnithorne died insolvent, and without having executed the mortgage. Sir W. Grant observed, "The money in 1791 was paid in without any act of the trustees: they were obliged to receive it: so far they were blameless. It came to Donnithorne's hands, and the trustees were not to blame in letting it come to his hands; but they might have afterwards made themselves responsible by merely not doing what was incumbent on them; by permitting the money to remain a considerable time in the hands of their co-trustee they might, without any positive act on their part, have made themselves liable. That will depend on the degree and extent of their laches in suffering the money to remain in the hands of Donnithorne. The trustees being authorised to put the money out on mortgage, it would be rather hard to say that they were guilty of laches by giving Donnithorne a little time to find a mortgage, taking his bond in the meantime. What passed in the interval between to the death of Donnithorne does not appear. If it were necessary to decide the point, an inquiry before the Master must be directed" (a). Sir W. Grant dismissed the bill, which was to set aside (as having been fraudulently obtained) a compromise of the alleged breach of trust, but did so on grounds foreign to the subject under discussion; Lord Eldon, however, before whom the case was brought upon appeal, reversed Sir W. Grant's decree, and directed an inquiry by the Master as to the conduct of the trustees from January, 1791, when the mortgage was paid off, to 1796, the time of Donnithorne's death. It then appeared by the Master's report, made in pursuance of the order, that the money had been invested by Donnithorne, soon after he had received it, in East India bills payable to himself; that the money due on the bills had been discharged in 1793, and the money paid to Donnithorne; that the co-trustees had made no inquiry about the trust fund from January, 1791, till May, 1795, which was the time when Symonds wrote the letter and made the applications already stated. On the hearing of the cause upon further directions, Lord Eldon said, "The cause comes back with a report stating a clear breach of trust in leaving the trust-fund in the situation represented from 1791 to 1793, and from 1793 to 1795. The money was laid out in 1791, with the consent of the trustees, on India bills payable to Donnithorne, a palpable breach of trust by placing the fund under his control, secured by little more than a promissory note payable to himself. It was probable that in 1793 Donnithorne would be paid the money due on the bills, and it would be lodged in his hands; and although the Court will proceed as favourably as it can to trustees who have laid out the money on a security from which they cannot with activity recover it, yet no Judge can say they are not guilty of a breach of trust, if they suffer it to lie out on such a security during so long a time (a). The trustees were guilty of a breach of trust, in permitting the money to remain on bills payable to Donnithorne alone, and in leaving the state of the funds unascertained for five years (b). I agree with the Master of the Rolls that inquiry might, on the principles of this Court, have discharged the trustees in given circumstances from a breach of trust. If, without previous participation, they in June, 1795, had found that, being themselves implicated in no breach of trust, they had a co-trustee who had been guilty of a shameful violation of his duty, and immediately exerted themselves to obtain from him a mortgage, which was their object at that time, and used their utmost efforts instead of filing a bill in this Court which perhaps might have destroyed his means of giving security, I should have hesitated long before I charged them, if inquiry had satisfied me that for a simple contract debt due to them they had taken a bond and a mortgage instead of instituting a suit, with the rational hope that by means of the bond and the mortgage they should obtain payment from their co-trustee" (c). The result of his Lordship's judgment was, that under the circumstances disclosed by the Master's report, the trustees were to be held responsible for the loss of the money.

6. Co-executors also, like co-trustees, are generally answerable each for his own acts only, and not for the acts of any co-executor (d). But in respect of receipts, the case of co-executors is materially different from that of co-trustees. An executor has, independently of his co-executor, a full and absolute control over the personal assets of the testator (e). If an executor join with a co-executor in a receipt, he does a wanton and unnecessary act; he interferes when the nature of the office lays upon him no such obligation, and therefore it was a rule very early established, that if executors joined in receipts, they should be answerable, each in solido, for the amount of the money received (a).

Westley v. Clarke.

7. In Westley v. Clarke (b), Lord Northington expressed an opinion that aimed at breaking down the rule; and by his decision of that case he succeeded in establishing a qualification of it.

Thompson, one of three co-executors, had called in a sum of money secured by a mortgage for a term of years, and received the amount, and afterwards, but the same day, sent round his clerk to his co-executors with a particular request that they would execute the assignment and sign the receipt, which they accordingly did. Thompson afterwards became bankrupt, and the money was lost, and thereupon a bill was filed to charge the co-executors. Lord Northington said, "The rule that executors joining in a receipt are all liable amounts to no more than this, that a joint receipt given by executors is a stronger proof that they actually joined in a receipt, because generally they have no occasion to join for conformity. But, if it appears plainly that one executor only received, and discharged the estate indebted, and assigned the security, and the others joined afterwards without any reason, and without being in a capacity to control the act of their co-executor either before or after the act was done, what grounds has any Court in conscience to charge him? The only act that affected the assets was the first that discharged the debt, and, according to the sense of the Bar, transferred the legal estate of the lands. Then that the co-executors are not to to answer for, and the second is nugatory." His Lordship was therefore of opinion that the co-executors were not liable for the misapplication by the co-executor.

W. 241, note (1) by Mr. Cox, his Lordship is reported to have said, according to a note of the case by Sir L. Kenyon, that in Westley v. Clarke he should have thought the co-executors liable if they had been present at the time the money was paid; and Lord Redesdale, in Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 242, 243, seemed to think that Lord Northington had no intention of breaking down, but only of qualifying the rule.

Executors joining pro formâ not answerable where the joining was a nugatory act.

The doctrine propounded in this case, that the joint receipt of co-executors is merely a stronger proof of the actual receipt than in the instance of co-trustees, and that an executor as well as a trustee may rebut the presumption by positive evidence, has since been repeatedly controverted (a). The simple point determined, viz. that an executor who signs shall not be answerable when the act of signature is nugatory, may be considered as now settled. Lord Thurlow, indeed, is reported to have questioned the decision in Westley v. Clarke (b): but Lord Alvanley said, "he must enter his dissent against the rule, that executors joining in a receipt were both liable, for he did not hold that an executor could not in any case be discharged from a receipt given for conformity: he did not find fault, for instance, with the case of Westley v. Clarke" (c). And, again, he said, "he perfectly concurred in the decision of that case; and the joining in a receipt, though not perhaps absolutely necessary, he would not consider conclusive" (d). Lord Eldon, in evident allusion to the case of Westley v. Clarke, admitted that the old rule had been pared down, at the same time expressing his opinion that the notion upon which the later cases had proceeded, viz. that the old rule had a tendency to discourage executors from acting, was very ill founded. A plain general rule, he thought, which once laid down was easily understood and might be generally known, was much more inviting to executors than a rule referring everything to the particular circumstances (e).

Present doctrine on the subject.

The later doctrine of the Court was thus enunciated by Lord Eldon:—"Though one executor has joined in a receipt, yet whether he is liable shall depend on his acting. The former was a simple rule that joining should be considered as acting, but now joining alone does not impose responsibility" (f); and in another case he observed that the old rule had been "broken down, leaving every case to be determined by its own circumstances" (g). Lord Redesdale laid down the rule thus: "the distinction with respect to mere signing appears to be this; that if a receipt be given for the purpose of form, then the signing will not charge the person not receiving; but if it be given under circumstances purporting that the money, though not actually received by both executors, was under the control of both, such receipt shall charge; and the true question in all these cases seems to have been, whether the money was under the control of both executors: if it was so considered by the person paying the money, then the joining in the receipt by the person who did not actually receive amounted to a direction to pay to his co-executor (for it could have no other meaning), and he became responsible for the money, just as if he had actually received it" (a). And in another case he said, "where two executors join in a receipt to a debtor, though the receipt of one would have been a discharge to the debtor, yet, they joining in the discharge, the debtor is taken to have paid to them both. His requiring the discharge of the executor who has not received the money amounts to saying, 'I make this payment to you both, and not to him only who actually receives the money'" (b).

Churchill v. Hobson.

8. In Churchill v. Hobson (c), Lord Harcourt took a distinction between creditors and legatees (d); that in the case of creditors who were entitled to the utmost benefit of the law, the joining of the executors in the receipt might make each liable for the whole; but when the legatees were concerned, who had no remedy for their demand except in equity, it was altogether inequitable that one executor should answer for the receipt of the other. This doctrine was thus commented upon by Lord Northington. "At law," he said, "a joint receipt is conclusive evidence that the money came to them both, and is not to be contradicted; but a Court of equity, which rejects estoppels and pursues truth, will decree according to the justice and verity of the fact (e); and what is said by Lord Harcourt as to the distinction between a receipt of this kind as to a legatee and a creditor seems to have this meaning—that a creditor may at law charge both executors on a joint receipt, but that in a Court of equity, where alone legacies are received, such receipt shall not be conclusive, but the Court will see who actually received, and charge that person accordingly" (f). The distinction taken by Lord Harcourt has by subsequent authorities been clearly overruled (a).

Executor may be answerable to creditors when not to legatees.

Lord Redesdale, however, has rightly observed, that "there may be a case, where executors would be charged as against creditors, though not as against legatees; for legatees are bound by the terms of the will, creditors are not, and therefore, if the testator direct the executors to collect the assets, and pay the proceeds into the hands of A., which is done accordingly, and A. fails, if a creditor remain unpaid, he may charge the executors; but, as regards a legatee, the executors may justify themselves by the directions of the will" (b).

Executor responsible for any act which puts assets into the hands of a co-executor.

9. On the same principle that an executor is liable for joining in a receipt, he is responsible for any act by which he reduces any part of the testator's property into the sole possession of his co-executor (c), as if an executor join in drawing (d), or indorsing (e), a bill, or be otherwise instrumental in giving to his co-executor possession of any part of the property (f). So it is laid down in an old case, that "if by agreement between the executors one be to receive and intermeddle with such a part of the estate, and the other with such a part, each of them will be chargeable for the whole, because the receipts of each are pursuant to the agreement made betwixt both" (g). So an executor is answerable, if he give a power of attorney, or other authority, to his co-executor to collect the assets (h), or deliver to him securities for money which enable him to receive the amount due (i).

Executor not answerable for joining where the act is necessary.

10. But under particular circumstances the joining of an executor is as absolutely necessary as the joining of a trustee, and of course in such cases executors and trustees are put upon the same footing in respect of liability.

As in bills of exchange held jointly.

Thus, if a bill of exchange be remitted to two agents payable to them personally, who on the death of their principal are made his executors, the mere indorsement of one, after they are executors, in order to enable the other to receive the money, will not operate to charge him who does not actually receive (a).

And in transfer of stock.

And so where the joining of both executors is necessary to the transfer of stock (b).

Unless the act be with improper view.

11. But where the joining of an executor is absolutely indispensable, it is still incumbent on the executor to see that the act in which he joins is perfectly consistent with the due execution of the trust (c).

Executor must not depend on mere representation of his co-executor.

12. And the executor will not be excused if he rely on the mere representation of his co-executor as to the necessity or propriety of the act, for the executor has imposed upon him at least ordinary and reasonable diligence to inquire whether the representation is true (d).

Greater caution required where the testator has been long dead.

13. And if, at a period when in the ordinary course of administration the debts should long since have been discharged, an executor is applied to by his co-executor to join in a transfer of stock for the purpose of payment of debts, and the executor does inquire, and ascertains there are such debts, but afterwards it turns out that the co-executor had in his hands a fund sufficient for the payment of the debts, in such a case the executor who joins in the receipt is liable to the imputation of negligence for not having acquainted himself how the co-executor had dealt with the assets during the preceding period, and is liable for the application of the money he enables the co-executor to receive (e).

Executor must not leave the money in the hands of the co-executor.

14. And the executor will be answerable if he leave the money, as for two years, in the hands of the co-executor, when by the terms of the trust it ought to have been invested on proper securities (f). But an executor will not be called upon to replace so much of the fund as it can be proved the co-executor bonâ fide expended towards the purposes of the trust (g).

Liability of executor for not getting in money owing from a co-executor.

15. And the executor will be equally answerable, whether the money left in the hands of the defaulting co-executor consists of a debt due from him to the testator, or of property received by him after the testator's death. Thus, in Styles v. Guy (a), a testator appointed three executors, all of whom proved the will; but one of them, viz., Guy, was the acting executor. Guy, at the death of the testator, had large assets in his hands, with which he eventually absconded. The two co-executors were held responsible for the loss; and though free from blame morally, had to pay upwards of 20,000*l.* out of their own pockets. They knew, or ought to have known, that Guy was a debtor to the estate; and having by probate accepted the executorship, it was their duty to have recovered the debt from Guy as from any other debtor to the estate, and this they neglected to do for a period of six years.

Co-administrators on same footing as co-executors.

16. The rules respecting co-executors are equally applicable to co-administrators. Lord Hardwicke once expressed an opinion that joint administrators resembled rather co-trustees, and that any one of them could not exercise the office without the concurrence of the rest (b); but it was afterwards determined in the Court of King's Bench, that joint administrators and co-executors stood in this respect precisely on the same footing (c).

How trustee ought to act where a breach of trust is committed by a co-trustee.

17. To return to the liabilities of co-trustees: if one trustee be cognizant of a breach of trust committed by another, and either industriously conceal it (d), or do not take active measures for the protection of the cestui que trust's interest (e), he will himself become responsible for the mischievous consequences of the act. A trustee is called upon, if a breach of trust be threatened, to prevent it by obtaining an injunction (f), and, if a breach of trust has been already committed, to bring an action for the restoration of the trust fund to its proper condition (g), or, at least, to take such other active measures as, with a due regard to all the circumstances of the case may be considered the most prudential (a).

Effect of the indemnity clauses.

18. [Formerly an express clause was] inserted in trust-deeds, that one trustee should not be answerable for the receipts, acts, or defaults of his co-trustee. But the proviso, while it informed the trustee of the general doctrine of the Court, added nothing to his security against the liabilities of the office. In Westley v. Clarke (b) Lord Northington was inclined to attach some importance to the clause. But equity infuses such a proviso into every trust-deed (c), and a person can have no better right from the expression of that which, if not expressed, had been virtually implied (d). It is clear that, in later cases, the Court has considered it an immaterial circumstance whether the instrument creating the trust contained such a proviso or not (e). And now, by Lord St. Leonards' Act, every instrument creating a trust shall be deemed to contain the usual indemnity and re-imbursement clauses, and therefore in future the express introduction of them in deeds and wills may be safely dispensed with (f).

Special indemnity clause.

19. A settlor, however, has full power to abridge the ordinary duties of trustees, and a special indemnity clause may be so worded as to exempt trustees from responsibility in respect of acts, which would otherwise be breaches of trust. Thus, if a testator declare "that any trustee who shall pay over to his co-trustee, or shall do or concur in any act enabling his co-trustee to receive any moneys, shall not be obliged to see to the application thereof; nor shall such trustee be subsequently rendered responsible by an express notice or intimation of the actual misapplication of the same moneys," here the testator has not only appointed joint trustees, but has also authorized each of them to delegate his duties to a co-trustee; and therefore where two trustees, under such a power, enabled a third to receive moneys, who misapplied them, and the fraud was concealed for two years, the two were held not to be responsible, though but for the special power they would have been declared liable on the ground of crassa negligentia (a); [and this case has since been followed (b).]

Trustee shall derive no advantage from the trust.

Sixthly. A Trustee shall not make a profit of his office.

1. It is a general rule established to keep trustees in the straight line of their duty, that they shall not derive any personal advantage from the administration of the trust property (c). It was upon this principle that Lord Eldon once directed an inquiry, whether the liberty of sporting over the trust estate could be let for the benefit of the cestuis que trust, and, if not, he thought the game should belong to the heir; the trustee might appoint a gamekeeper, if necessary, for the preservation of the game, but not to keep up a mere establishment of pleasure (d).

Not entitled to the game on the trust estate where it can be let.

Nor to a right of presentation.

2. So, if an advowson be devised to trustees, and the next presentation cannot be made productive to the trust estate, the right of presentation does not belong to the trustee, but must be exercised by him for the benefit of the heir-at-law, or of the cestuis que trust, according to circumstances. Thus, where an advowson was devised to trustees upon trust during the life of A., to apply the rents and profits in the purchase of an estate to be settled to certain uses upon the death of A., it was decided that the right of presentation (should any vacancy occur) during A.'s life, would, as undisposed of, belong to the heir-at-law (e); and, in a later case, where there was a devise to trustees during the life of A. to apply the rents and profits in payment of debts, it was held that the right of next presentation during the life of A. was a profit, which ought to be sold for the benefit of the creditors (f). If a testator devise an advowson to trustees for sale, the proceeds to be divided amongst certain persons, and a presentation falls, though the heir is absolutely disinherited, the trustees have not the nomination, but it belongs to the cestuis que trust (a), and where the cestuis que trust are tenants in common, they must cast lots for the presentation (b).

Trustee may not buy up debts for himself.

3. If trustees or executors buy up any debt or incumbrance to which the trust estate is liable for a less sum than is actually due thereon, they will not be allowed to take the benefit to themselves, but the creditors or legatees, or other cestuis que trust, shall have the advantage of it (c). [And if a trustee takes advantage of his position to buy up fixtures on the trust property, which he afterwards sells at a profit, he cannot personally retain the benefit so acquired (d); and the same principle applies to all persons in a fiduciary position, as in the case of a solicitor buying up incumbrances created by his client, for the purpose of relieving the client from embarrassment (e).] But if a trustee buy up a debt intending it for cestuis que trust, and they refuse to take it or pay the purchase-money, they cannot, after lying by for a length of time, step forward when the speculation turns out profitably and claim the debt for themselves (f).

Trustee trading with the trust estate must account for the profits.

4. Again, if a trustee or executor use the fund committed to his care in buying and selling land, or in stock speculations, or lay out the trust money in a commercial adventure, as in fitting out a vessel for a voyage; or put it into the trade of another person from which he is to derive certain stipulated gains (g), or employ it himself for the purposes of his own business or trade (h), in all these cases, while the executor or trustee is liable for all losses, he must account to the cestui que trust for all clear profits. And where a trustee retired from his trust in consideration of his successor paying him a sum of money, it was held that the money so paid must be treated as forming part of the trust estate, and be accounted for by the retiring trustee (a).

Giving to a trustee.

5. Neither can a trustee bargain with his cestui que trust for a benefit, and it is even said that a cestui que trust cannot give a benefit to his trustee (b).

Mortgagee regarded as a trustee to some intents.

6. Mortgagees are to some, though not to all, intents and purposes trustees, and in one case (the authority of which, however, has been doubted), where a mortgagor in fee died, and the mortgagee bought in the mortgagor's wife's right of dower, it was decreed that the heir of the mortgagor, on bringing his bill to redeem, might take the purchase at the price paid (c).

Partners.

7. Partners also stand in a fiduciary relation to each other (d), and if on the termination of the partnership by effluxion of time (e), or bankruptcy (f), or death (g), a partner instead of winding up the partnership affairs, retains the whole assets in the trade, so that in effect the partnership continues, he must account for a share of the profits (h). But as profits arise not only from capital, but also from the application of skill and industry, and other ingredients (i), while in former times the Court, from the difficulty of taking the account, often gave interest only (j); yet, at the present day, the Court will direct an account of profits, having regard to the various ingredients of capital, skill, industry, &c., or will comprise them under the head of "just allowances" (a).

(h) [And see Partnerships Act, 1890, s. 42, and Lindley on the Act, p. 108.] In Knox v. Gye, 5 L. R. H. L. 656, Lord Westbury denied that any fiduciary relation existed between the surviving partner, and the representative of the deceased partner, but Lord Hatherley was clearly of opinion to the contrary. See the arguments of these judges pro and con in the report. The surviving partner has, no doubt, larger powers than an ordinary trustee, for as between him and third persons he can sign a valid receipt for an outstanding asset, and being personally liable for the debts, he may be able to give a good title on sale of the partnership property, the presumption being that such realization is wanted for payment of debts; but it seems a strong measure to lay down, that the surviving partner is not to account for what he receives after the expiration of six years from the death of his co-partner.

Traders not partners.

8. Where the trader stands in no fiduciary situation, as where he is neither trustee nor executor, nor was the partner of the testator, but trust monies come to his hands bonâ fide, though with a knowledge of the trust, that is, of the breach of trust (as where a trustee or executor lends money without authority to a trader), here the trader, though answerable for principal and interest, is not made to account for the extra profits (b). And if a person was in fact a partner with the testator but without knowing it (c), or has bonâ fide settled the partnership accounts (d), he will be equally protected as if he had not been such partner. And if the terms of the partnership be that on the death of any partner his share shall be taken by the survivor, at the value estimated at the last stock-taking, and a partner dies having appointed three executors, one of whom is a co-partner, and another afterwards becomes a co-partner, and the testator's share is left in the business and traded with, the two executors who are in the firm are not answerable for profits, but only for the capital of the testator's share with interest. The surviving partners are in this case regarded as purchasers of the share of the deceased, at the price expressed by the articles, and the two executors are answerable on the footing only of having left outstanding a debt, which they ought in a reasonable time to have got in (e).

Agents, &c.

(e) Vyse v. Foster, 8 L. R. Ch. App. 309; affirmed, 7 L. R. H. L. 318. The judgment of L. J. James should be read, to see the principles upon which the Court now acts. The Court in this case viewed the claim against the surviving partners, though one of them was also executor, as a debt only, and, as such, not giving a right to an account of profits, and the Court observed that, although there had been hundreds, probably thousands, of cases in which traders had been executors, and in which, on taking the accounts, balances, and large balances, had been found due from them, yet where there had been no active breach of trust, in the getting in or selling out trust assets, but there had been a mere balance on the account of receipts and payments, the omission to invest the balance had never made the executor liable to account for the profits of his own trade. Ib. p. 335. [And see now the Partnership Act, 1890, ss. 42 (2), 43, which is in accordance with the previous law, Lindley on the Act, p. 111.]

Heir or devisee purchasing incumbrance.

10. Even an heir has been so far regarded as a trustee for creditors of the ancestor, that he cannot hold an incumbrance as against them for more than he gave for it (j), and it is presumed, though there is no decision upon it, that the rule applies equally to a devisee as between him and the creditors of the testator (k).

But either an heir or a devisee who was himself an incumbrancer at the death of the ancestor or testator, may buy up a prior (but not a subsequent) incumbrance, and hold it for the whole amount due; for his own incumbrance is by title paramount and not affected by any trust for creditors, and the Court considers him to that extent as a stranger, and allows him to buy up the prior incumbrance not as heir or devisee, but for the protection of his own incumbrance (l). And if the heir or devisee acquire the prior incumbrance not by his own act or procurement but by the bounty of another, as either by gift inter vivos, or by will, there seems no reason on principle why the heir or devisee should not hold the prior incumbrance for the whole amount due; and semble it can make no difference whether the donor was the prior incumbrancer himself, or was a stranger who had purchased from the incumbrancer at an under-value (m).

And an heir or devisee may, it seems, hold an incumbrance which he has bought up himself at an under-value for the whole amount as against a subsequent incumbrancer, though not as against the general creditors of the ancestor or testator; as if A. be the first incumbrancer, B. the second, and C. the heir or devisee, and C. buys up A.'s incumbrance, here if B. have a charge merely and is not a creditor, or his debt is barred by the statute, there is no thread of trust or confidence running between B. and C., and therefore C. is regarded as a stranger (a).

Joint purchasers.

11. One of two joint purchasers of an estate has been declared a trustee for the other of a proportionate part of the benefit derived by the former from an incumbrance bought up by him at a less value (b).

Tenant for life.

12. An opinion has also been expressed by a high authority, that even a tenant for life stands in such a confidential relation towards the remainderman that he cannot as against him hold an incumbrance which he has bought up for more than he gave for it (c).

Trustee may not charge for services.

13. As regards trustees, in the strict sense of the word, the general rule deprives them of any right to receive remuneration for their personal labour and services.

Trustee may not be receiver of the trust estate at a salary.

14. Thus, the trustee of an estate cannot be appointed receiver of it at a salary (d); and even should he offer his services gratuitously, he would not be appointed except under particular circumstances, for it is the duty of the trustee to superintend the receiver and check the accounts with an adverse eye (e); but if a person be merely a trustee to preserve contingent remainders, the reasons for excluding him are held not to be applicable (f).

Factors, &c.

15. In the absence of any special authority contained in the instrument of trust (g), a trustee or executor who happens to be a factor (h), broker (i), commission agent (j), or auctioneer (k), can make no profit in the way of his business from the estate committed to his charge. So trustees who are bankers cannot in their character of trustees borrow money of themselves, as bankers, at

Solicitor.

16. A trustee, whether expressly or constructively such (b), who is a solicitor, cannot charge for his professional labours, but will be allowed merely his costs out of pocket (c), unless there be a special contract or direction to that effect (d); and even then he cannot charge for matters not strictly belonging to the professional character, such as attendances for paying premiums on policies, for transfers of stock, attendances on proctors or auctioneers, or attendances on paying legacies or debts (e), [unless such non-professional charges are expressly authorized. Where the will authorized a solicitor-trustee to make the usual professional or other proper and reasonable charges for all business done and time expended in relation to the trusts of the will, whether such business was usually within the business of a solicitor or not, charges for business not strictly of a professional character were allowed (f). But where the solicitor trustee was authorized to make the usual professional charges, and was to be entitled "to make the same professional charges and to receive the same pecuniary emoluments and remuneration for all business done by him, and all attendances, time and trouble given and bestowed by him, in or about the execution of the trusts and powers of the will, or the management and administration of the trust estate, as if he, not being himself a trustee or executor, were employed by the trustee or executor," non-professional charges were disallowed (g).] A trustee who in that character invests the trust fund upon mortgage, and acts also for the mortgagor, is not accountable to the trust for the professional profits made by the mortgage and which are paid by the mortgagor (h). [But a solicitor who is also executor cannot, by postponing probate, entitle himself in the mean time to charge for professional work done for his co-executor in relation to his testator's estate (i).

A solicitor trustee who prepares leases of portions of the trust estate, the costs being paid by the lessees, is accountable, as the work is done on behalf of the trust estate. And where a solicitor-trustee was made defendant to an administration action in which a receiver was appointed, and his firm through their London agents acted for the receiver and made profit costs, it was held that they could not be retained, as a trustee must not place himself in a position in which his interest conflicts with his duty (a).

But where trustees appoint the partner of one of them, who is a solicitor, steward of a manor which forms part of the trust estate, such partner is not accountable in respect of fees for manorial business received by him in his capacity of steward (b).

A declaration in a will that a solicitor-trustee may charge profit costs is a gift to him of a beneficial interest within section 15 of the Wills Act, and is therefore void if he is one of the attesting witnesses (c).] As the solicitor-trustee himself cannot charge, so neither can the charge be made by a firm of which he is a partner (d), even though the business be done by one of the partners who is not a trustee (e); but a country solicitor defending a suit in Chancery as executor, through a town agent, will be allowed such proportion of the agent's bill in respect of the defence, as such agent is entitled to receive (f); and a trustee may employ his partner as the solicitor to the trust, and pay the usual professional charges, if by the articles of partnership the trustee is not to participate in the profits or have any benefit from such charges (g). Partners.

17. In Cradock v. Piper (h), the principle of the rule was held not to apply where several co-trustees were made defendants to a suit, this being a matter thrust upon them and beyond their own control, so that one of the trustees, who was a solicitor, was allowed to act for himself and the others, and to receive the full costs, it not appearing that they had been increased through his conduct. tion be made between costs out of court and costs in court, because as regards the latter, the conduct of the trustee is under the cognizance of the Court, and the costs are to be taxed, the rule would equally apply to the case of a single trustee defending himself (a). The exception, [though well established (b),] appears to be anomalous, and is not likely to be extended. [It applies not only to proceedings in a hostile action, but to friendly proceedings in chambers, e.g., an application for maintenance of an infant (c).] Where a single trustee defended himself by his partner, the professional profits were disallowed (d).

Trustee might accidentally be advantaged, as by failure of heirs of the cestui que trust.

18. [Prior to the Intestates Estates Act, 1884, a trustee might by possibility have derived] a benefit from the trust estate, not from any positive right in himself, but from the want of right in any other; as if lands were vested in A. and his heirs upon trust for B. and his heirs, and B. died without an heir, the equitable interest in this case could neither escheat to the lord (e); nor, if the trust were created by conveyance from B., whose seisin or title was ex parte paternâ, could the lands, upon failure of heirs in that line, descend to the heir of B. ex parte maternâ (f): but the trustee, no person remaining to sue a subpœna, retained, as the legal proprietor, the beneficial enjoyment (g). [But now where the death occurs since the 14th August, 1884, the law of escheat applies in the same manner as if the interest had been a legal estate in corporeal hereditaments (h).] are themselves mere bare trustees to whom, if the legal estate had been in their testator, it would not have passed by his will (a).]

Purchaser dying without heir after payment of purchase-money, and before conveyance.

20. In Burgess v. Wheate, Sir Thomas Clarke, M. R., put the case of a purchaser paying the consideration money, and then dying without an heir before the execution of the conveyance, Whether under such circumstances the vendor should keep both the estate and the money? The M. R. thought that the vendor would keep the estate, but that the purchaser's personal representative would have a lien upon it for the purchase money (b).

Mortgagor dying without an heir.

In the same case the questions were asked, whether in the event of a mortgagor in fee dying intestate as to real estate and leaving no heir, the mortgagee should hold the estate absolutely? and whether, if the mortgagee demanded his debt of the personal representative, he should take to himself both the land and the debt? Sir Thomas Clarke thought that the mortgagee might hold the estate absolutely; but that if the mortgagee took his remedy against the personal representative, the Court would compel him to re-convey, not to the lord by escheat, but to the personal representative, and would consider the estate reconveyed as coming in lieu of the personalty, and as assets to answer even simple contract creditors (c). Lord Mansfield said, "He could not state on any ground established what would be the determination in that case" (d). Lord Henley observed, "The lord has his tenant and services in the mortgagee, and he has no right for anything more. Perhaps it would not be difficult to answer what would be the justice of the case, but it is not to the business in hand" (e). In the opinion of Sir John Romilly, M. R., the mortgagee held absolutely, subject to the payment of the mortgagor's debts out of the equity of redemption (f). [But since the late Act (g) the interest of the mortgagor will escheat to the lord.]

21. But a failure of inheritable blood might before 4th July, 1870, have happened (h), not only for want of an heir (as in the case of an illegitimate person dying without issue), but through the corruption of blood caused by attainder, for petit treason or murder; and in the case of such attainder, the question arose whether the trustee should hold against the heir of the person attainted. Under the system of uses the heir could not sue his subpœna by reason of the corruption of blood (a); but trusts have since been administered on more liberal principles than uses formerly were. In reference to this point, and also to the question, whether the trustees could hold against the person attainted himself if subsequently pardoned, Sir Thomas Clarke said, "The detaining the estate against the Crown where the cestui que trust dies without leaving a relation was different from detaining it against the cestui que trust himself. The Court would go as far as it could, and he thought the trustee would be estopped from setting up such a claim" (b). Lord Mansfield said, "He could not resolve the case upon principle, for he could find no clear and certain rule to go by" (c). But Lord Henley agreed with Sir Thomas Clarke, and asked, "If the King thinks proper to pardon the felon, what hinders him from suing his trustee?—what hinders him from instantly assigning his trust for the benefit of his family" (d).

Whether the author of the trust can assert a claim.

22. A question was put by Lord Mansfield in Burgess v. Wheate, but was neither answered at the time, nor received any notice from the bench afterwards, viz. whether the right to the estate might not, in particular cases, result to the author of the trust (e). As, if A. infeoffed B. and his heirs, in trust for C. and his heirs, and C. [before the 14th August, 1884 died] without heirs, could the equitable interest result in favour of A.? Such a case has never occurred, and there is no authority upon the subject; but it seems anomalous that a trust can under any circumstances result when the whole beneficial interest has been once parted with.

Trustee cannot come into a court of equity for his own benefit.

23. As the trustee when he can claim in these cases advances not a positive, but merely a negative right, he has no ground for coming into a court of equity for the establishment of his right (f). Thus, where A. devised a copyhold estate to B. and his heirs in trust for C. and his heirs, and C. died without heirs, and then B. died, having entered upon the lands, and having applied the rents to the trust, but never having been admitted, and the heir of B. filed a bill against the lord for compelling him to grant him admission, Lord Loughborough said, "If a man has got the legal estate, the Court will not take it from him, except for some person who has a claim; but does it follow that the Court will give him the legal estate?" (a) [But a Court of law will grant a mandamus to the lord to admit the heir of the trustee (b), and prior to the late Act the heir when admitted was entitled to hold the lands for his own benefit (c).]

If cestui que trust die without next of kin, the trust chattel goes to the Crown.

24. If a cestui que trust of chattels, whether real or personal, die intestate, without leaving any next of kin, the beneficial interest will not, in this case, remain with the trustee, but like all other bona vacantia will vest in the Crown by the prerogative (d). And the result will be the same where the cestui que trust, though not dying absolutely intestate, has appointed an executor, who by the language of the will itself is excluded from any beneficial interest (e). But an executor not expressly made a trustee by the will, was, before the Act of William IV. (f), entitled primâ facie to the surplus for his own benefit, and that statute, it is conceived, has converted him into a trustee for the next of kin only, and has not altered the old law, as between him and the Crown, in case there be no next of kin (g).

Trustee cannot set up title adverse to cestui que trust.

25. A trustee is, under no circumstances, allowed to set up a title adverse to his cestui que trust (h). But though he may not claim against his own cestui que trust, yet he is not bound to deliver over the property to his cestui que trust if he cannot safely do so by reason of notice of title in another which is paramount to the trust (i).

Moral rights.

26. Trustees would not be justified in doing any act at variance with their trust. If, for instance, they honestly believed that property accepted by them in trust for one belonged of right to another, they would not be justified in communicating to such other that he could successfully claim the estate. Trustees have the custody of the property, but do not keep the conscience of their cestui que trust.

Impeachable settlements.

27. It sometimes happens that circumstances raise a suspicion but without any constat, that the trust deed is impeachable, as if the trust be created by a father tenant for life and a son claiming in remainder under an appointment in exercise of a special power and there are grounds for surmising that the appointment was collusive, but the trustee must assume the validity of the trust until it is actually impeached (a).

CHAPTER XIV.

THE DUTIES OF TRUSTEES OF CHATTELS PERSONAL.

We next advance to the duties of trustees, and as trusts of chattels personal are of the most frequent occurrence, we shall first advert to trustees of property of this description. We may consider this branch of our subject under six heads:—1. The reduction of the chattel into the possession of the trustee. 2. The safe custody of it. 3. The rules of the Court as to conversion. 4. The proper investment of the trust fund. 5. The liability of trustees to payment of interest in cases of improper detainer; and, 6. The distribution of the trust fund.

SECTION I.

OF REDUCTION INTO POSSESSION.

Of reduction into possession.

1. The first duty of trustees is to place the trust property in a state of security. Thus if the trust fund be an equitable interest of which the legal estate cannot at present be transferred to them, it is their duty to lose no time in giving notice of their own interest to the persons in whom the legal estate is vested; for otherwise he who created the trust might incumber the interest he has settled in favour of a purchaser without notice, who by first giving notice to the legal holder might gain a priority (a).

Chose en action.

2. If the trust fund be a chose en action, as a debt, which may be reduced into possession, it is the trustee's duty to be active in getting it in; and any unnecessary delay in this respect will be at his own personal risk (b). A marriage settlement often contains a covenant by one of the parties for payment of a certain sum to the trustees within a limited period, and if the Statute of Limitations be allowed to run so that the claim is barred, the trustees are answerable (a); and à fortiori the trustees will be responsible if they execute the settlement and sign a receipt for the money but do not actually receive it (b).

Prepayment.

Though trustees may be answerable for delaying after the proper time to get in a chose en action, there can be no objection to their receiving it before the time, if the person liable be willing to pay it (c). [And trustees of a reversionary chose en action may concur with the person entitled to the prior interest in calling for an immediate transfer to themselves of the chose en action (d).]

Executors.

3. There is no inflexible rule as to the time within which executors are bound to get in the assets (e); but in every case the particular circumstances must govern, and the Court allows the executors a large discretion (f). Thus if a testator die possessed of live stock which cannot be kept but at a great expense, the executors ought to sell forthwith (g). So executors would not be justified in continuing the testator's housekeeping expenses for an unreasonable time, but when they have acquainted themselves with the facts, should discharge the servants and break up the establishment; and an interval of two months was in one case, but under rather special circumstances, held to be justifiable (h). A testator died possessed of Crystal Palace shares, and it was contended that the executors were to be responsible for the value at the end of two months, but the Court held that they had a discretion whether to sell or not until the end of twelve months (i).

Buxton v. Buxton.

Where a great part of the assets was outstanding on Mexican bonds, and the executors sold in the course of the second year from the testator's decease, Lord Cottenham held that, if the executors were bound at once to convert the assets without considering how far it was for the interest of the persons beneficially entitled, there would of necessity be always an immediate sale, and often at a great sacrifice of property; that executors were entitled to exercise a reasonable discretion according to the circumstances of the particular case. The will had directed the trustees to convert "with all convenient speed," but this, observed his Lordship, was the ordinary duty implied in the office of every executor (a). [So where a testator bequeathed his personal estate to his executors upon trust to divide the same equally among four persons, all of whom were of age, and the estate comprised foreign railway bonds which the executors retained beyond the end of the first year from the testator's death, it was held by the Court of Appeal affirming the decision of V. C. Hall, that as the executors acted with a view to what they thought beneficial to everybody interested, and in the exercise of their discretion thought it more prudent to wait, they ought not to suffer because they had committed an error of judgment, and L. J. James observed, "It would be very hard upon executors who have been saddled with property of this speculative kind, and have endeavoured to do their duty honestly, if they were to be fixed with a loss arising from their not having taken what, as it was proved by the result, would have been the best course" (b).] But in Grayburn v. Clarkson, where the testator died possessed of shares in the Leeds Banking Company which involved a liability without limit, and the shares remained unsold for many years, L. J. Wood said that there was no fixed rule that conversion must take place by the end of one year, but that such was the primâ facie rule, and that executors who did not convert by that time, must show some reason why they did not (c); and the Court directed an inquiry whether any loss had accrued by the neglect to sell by the end of one year from the death of the testator, and declared the executor responsible for any such loss (d). And again in Sculthorpe v. Tipper (e), where a testator died possessed of shares in an unlimited Banking Company, and directed his executors to realize his personal estate "immediately after his decease, or so soon thereafter as his trustees might see fit so to do," the trustees acting, as they believed, for the best interests of the parties, neglected for two years and a quarter to sell the shares, and they were made liable for the consequences, the Vice-Chancellor observing that although a discretion was vested in the trustees, they were bound to exercise it within a reasonable time, that is within a year. This has been considered a somewhat harsh decision. Had the testator simply directed the executors to realize immediately after his decease, they would still have had the year, and the Vice-Chancellor therefore gave no effect to the words of the power, "or so soon thereafter as they might see fit." The question should rather have been, Was the discretion vested in them bonâ fide exercised? In another case where the trustees had an absolute discretion to sell and convert the testator's shares in a banking company, "at such time or times as they might think proper," they were held not to be liable for retaining the testator's shares beyond a year from his decease, but were made liable for other new shares in the bank which they had purchased themselves (a).

[And where an absolute discretion is given to the trustees to postpone the sale and conversion of the estate, they are not bound by the ordinary rule to convert the property within a year, even although it consists of shares in companies with unlimited liability, and in the absence of mala fides they will not be responsible for losses arising to the estate from the non-conversion (b); nor will the Court interfere with the exercise of the discretion if the trustees are acting bonâ fide (c).

[Investment becoming unauthorized after testator's decease.]

Where shares belonging to a testator are altered in amount after his death and become liable to calls, so as no longer to be an authorized investment according to the terms of the will, the trustees should convert them with reasonable speed (d).

[Retaining investments for infants in specie.]

4. Where it is for the benefit of infants to retain investments which are not authorized by the terms of the trust, the Court has a discretion to allow such retainer. The Court, however, will not exercise this discretion unless special circumstances are shown to exist, and the mere fact that the unauthorized securities are such as are authorized by sect. 21 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and that a loss of income would be caused by a conversion, will not induce the Court to allow the securities to be retained (e).]

remain outstanding upon personal security (a), though the debt was a loan by the testator himself on what he considered an eligible investment (b). And it will not justify the executor, if he merely apply for payment through his attorney, but do not follow it up by instituting legal proceedings (c). Personal security changes from day to day, by reason of the personal responsibility of the debtor giving the security; and, as a testator's means of judging of the value of that responsibility are put an end to by his death, the executor who omits to get in the money within a reasonable time becomes himself the security (d). An executor will be equally liable if he knows that a co-executor is a debtor to the testator's estate, and does not take the same active steps for recovery of the amount from the co-executor, as it would have been his duty to take against a stranger. And it does not vary the case that the testator himself was in the habit of leaving money in the hands of that co-executor, and treating him as a private banker (e). Nor will an executor be excused for not calling in money on personal security by a clause in the will, that the executors are to call in "securities not approved by them;" for such a direction is construed as referable to securities upon which a testator's property may allowably be invested, and not as authorizing an investment which the Court will not sanction (f). If a settlement contain a clause that the trustees are to get in the money "whenever they shall think fit and expedient so to do," they will be liable, if they refrain from enforcing payment out of tenderness to the tenant for life without a due regard to the interests of all the cestuis que trust (g). [And, generally, it is the duty of trustees to press for payment of the trust funds to them, and if they are not paid within a reasonable time, to enforce payment by legal proceedings, and they are especially bound to act promptly where payment is deferred by the terms of the trust to a specified time (a), but where there are no funds available trustees are not bound to institute proceedings at their own expense (b)]. If it appears, or there is reasonable ground for believing, that had legal steps been taken they would have produced no useful result, the executor or trustee is not liable (c); [but where a trustee seeks to excuse himself on this ground, the burden of showing that if he had taken proceedings no good would have resulted from them lies upon him (d).]

Case of trust fund outstanding on mortgage.

6. Money outstanding upon good mortgage security an executor is not called upon to realize, until it is wanted in the course of administration (e). "For what," said Lord Thurlow, "is the executor to do? Must the money lie dead in his hands, or must he put it out on fresh securities? On the original securities he had the testator's confidence for his sanction, but on any new securities it will be at his own peril" (f). But the trustee should ascertain that there is no reason to suspect the goodness of the security (g); and if it be not adequate, it is the duty of the trustee to insist on its being paid, though by the terms of the settlement every investment or change of investment is to be with the consent of the tenant for life who refuses, for nothing will justify conduct that puts the trust fund in danger (h).

How money to be received by trustees.

7. When the property is reduced into possession by actual payment, [and the circumstances of the case are such as render it impracticable or highly inconvenient for both trustees to be present at the payment of the money (i), while both must join in signing the receipt, it is conceived that the money may be paid for the time to one without responsibility on the part of the other. In a recent case, however, (j) where the question was as to the payment of purchase-money to trustees who were selling under a power of sale, Kay, J., expressed the opinion that it would be a breach of trust on the part of one trustee to allow his co-trustee to receive the trust money. But the early authorities on the general point were not specially considered, and it is conceived that the rule which was previously established (a), that a trustee joining in a receipt merely for the sake of conformity is not responsible for money not actually received by him still remains in force.] But a trustee will not be justified in allowing the co-trustee to retain the money in his hands for a longer period than the particular circumstances of the case may necessarily require. And, indeed, the safer course, where practicable, is, that the money should not be handed to either of the trustees personally, but should, in the first instance, be paid into some bank of credit to their joint account (b).

Receipts of trustees.

8. If money be payable to A., who is simply a trustee for B., it would clearly be a breach of trust to pay it to the trustee against the wishes of the cestui que trust (c); and, on the other hand, if the nature of the trust be such that the person who has the money ready in his hands could not reasonably be expected to see to the application, he may pay safely to the trustee (d). Some recent cases in Ireland have gone further, and taken a distinction between monies which are pure personalty and monies payable on sales or mortgages. Thus, where the owner of a policy assigned it to a trustee for a minor without a power of signing receipts, the Master of the Rolls in Ireland expressed an opinion (for a decision was not then called for), that if the Insurance Company were released from the debt by the person to whom they were liable at law, and whom the owner of the policy had constituted the trustee of it, they would not be answerable in equity for the execution of the trusts, and he did not understand how the rules applicable to purchasers of real property could be extended to debtors so as to implicate them in trusts created by their creditors (a). And in another case (b), where the insurer effected a policy for 700*l.*, and then assigned it to a trustee to pay 400*l.* to one, and 300*l.* to another, without an express power of signing receipts, and a bonus of 33*l.* was added to the policy, and the insurer being dead without a personal representative, and one of the cestuis que trust being also dead without a sufficient personal representative, and the other cestui que trust being in America, the company instituted an interpleader suit,—the Lord Chancellor of Ireland laid down the same distinction as the Master of the Rolls between a personal debt and money arising out of real estate, and held that the trustee could sign a discharge, and that the interpleader suit could not be sustained. The decision of the Lord Chancellor may have been correct, for the circumstance of one cestui que trust being abroad, and the other dead without a personal representative, as was also the insurer himself, may have justified the company in paying to the trustee; but the suggested distinction between pure personalty and money raised out of realty, until adopted by the English Courts, cannot be relied upon.

[(a) See ante, p. 281; and the cases there cited note (b). It must however be borne in mind that the rule allowing a trustee to sign a receipt for the sake of conformity without actually receiving the trust-money was founded on necessity, and that as at the present day, through increased means of communication and locomotion and the facilities of passing money through banks, trustees can in most cases at very slight expense avoid the risk of putting the trust-money, even for a moment, in the power of ONE of themselves, the cases in which they can escape liability on the plea of having signed merely for the sake of conformity are more restricted than formerly, and the plea is one which can only be relied upon under exceptional circumstances.]

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

9. By a late Act it is declared that where "purchase or mortgage money shall be payable to a person upon any express or implied trust," and the payment is made bonâ fide, the receipt of the trustee "shall effectually discharge the person paying the same, unless the contrary shall be expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust" (c). It seems the better opinion that the clause applies only to trusts created since the Act, viz. 13*th August*, 1859, for how can a person expressly declare that an Act shall not apply when the Act itself does not exist?

23 & 24 Vict. c. 145.

12. Where the holder of the money knows that the trustee intends to commit a breach of trust, it would not be safe to pay to the trustee, whether he has by these Acts or otherwise a power of signing receipts or not. But the fact of such a knowledge must be brought home to the person paying, so as to make him particeps criminis, a privy to the fraud (c). Receipt of a trustee who is known to intend a breach of trust.

SECTION II.

OF THE SAFE CUSTODY OF TRUST PROPERTY.

1. Lord Northington once observed, "No man can require or with reason expect that a trustee should manage another's property with the same care and discretion that he would his own" (d); but the maxim has never failed, as often as mentioned, to elicit strong marks of disapprobation, [and it is now established on the highest authority that the law requires of a trustee the same degree of diligence and care in the execution of his office that a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the management of his own affairs, but that as a general rule no higher degree of diligence will be required of him (e).] Trustee must take same care of the trust property as of his own.

2. A trustee in an old case, had kept in his house 40*l.* of trust money, and 200*l.* belonging to himself, and was robbed of both by his servant, and was held not to be responsible (f). An administratrix had left goods with her solicitor to be delivered to the party entitled. The articles were stolen; and the Court said it Robbery of the trust property.

was the same as if they had been in the custody of the administratrix, and it was too hard to charge her with the loss (a). Lord Romilly, however, in a recent case, made a distinction between a loss arising from a criminal act done by a stranger, and a criminal act done by an agent appointed by the trustee himself, and held that in the latter case, but aggravated by circumstances of carelessness, and where both parties were innocent, the trustee was liable (b).

Chattels passing by delivery.

3. Where there are several trustees, as they cannot all have the custody of the property, if the subject of the trust be articles which pass by delivery, as plate, they should be deposited with the bankers of the trustees (c). As to stocks transferred by delivery and payable to bearer, as Spanish bonds, Vice-Chancellor Wood observed, that "no doubt the bonds might be kept at the bankers' in a box with three locks, opened by three different keys, one to be kept by each of the three trustees; but as the interest was payable upon coupons twice a year, so that the box must be opened as often for that purpose, he thought that ordinary prudence did not require such a course to be adopted, more particularly as it would be the bankers' duty to see that the coupons only were taken out of the box, and that neither the box nor the securities were removed;" and so it was decided (d).

[Where Russian Railway bonds which passed by delivery were purchased by two trustees, and each of the trustees took possession of a moiety of the bonds, but one of the trustees disposed of the moiety held by him and applied the proceeds for his own purposes, it was held that the other trustee was liable for the misapplication, as it was the duty of the trustees where the bonds were transferable by delivery to take care that no improper disposition could be made of them (e).]

Insurance.

4. An executor has been held not to be answerable for having omitted to secure the safety of leasehold premises by insuring them against fire (f).

The Act (a) applies as well to trusts created by instruments executed before as to trusts created after its passing, but nothing therein contained is to authorise any trustee to do anything which he is in express terms forbidden to do, or to omit to do anything which he is in express terms directed to do by the instrument or instruments creating the trust."] money (a), the trustee will be personally liable for the consequences.

Trustee must not put the trust-fund out of his own control.

6. And a trustee must not lodge the money in such a manner as to put it out of his own control, though it be not under the control of another. White, a receiver appointed by the Court, in order to induce Adams and Burlton to become his sureties, entered into an arrangement with them, that the rents, as received, should be deposited in a bank in the joint names of the sureties, and that all drafts should be in the handwriting of Anderson, who was Adams' partner, and should be signed by White. An account was opened upon this footing, and the bank failed, and a considerable loss was incurred. Sir J. Leach held that the receiver and his sureties were not to be answerable (b); but his Honour's decision was reversed on appeal by the Lord Chancellor (c); and this reversal was afterwards affirmed on the final appeal by the House of Lords (d). [So, by the Trustee Act, 1888 (e), although in specified cases a trustee is empowered to appoint a solicitor to be his agent to receive money, yet if he allows the money to remain under the control of such solicitor longer than is reasonably necessary to enable the solicitor to pay the money to him, his liability is expressly retained.]

Whether executors may place money in bank payable to either of the co-executors.

7. In a case before Sir A. Hart, in Ireland, an executor was held to be justified, though he had placed the assets in a bank so as to be under the control of the co-executor. The money was entered in the books to the joint account of the co-executors, but the bank was in the habit of answering the cheques of either co-executor singly. "It is the custom of bankers," said Lord Chancellor Hart, "that what is deposited by one to the joint account may be withdrawn by the cheque of the other; and for convenience of business, it is necessary this risk should be incurred, for it would be very hard to transact business if every cheque should be signed by all the executors" (f). However, his Lordship admitted that "if there were any fraud or collusion, wilful default or gross neglect, or if the executor had any reason to put a stop to the mismanagement by the co-executor, the case would be altered" (a). But even with this qualification the doctrine is so contrary to the principle of other cases that no trustee or executor could be advised to rely upon it in practice (b).

Trustee responsible for bank if he ought not to have placed the money there.

8. The trustee will also be answerable for the failure of the bank, if he deposited the money there for safe custody, when it was his clear duty to have invested it in the funds for improvement (c), or if he left it there when he ought to have paid it to new trustees duly appointed (d), or into Court (e); or if, when the purposes of the trust do not require a balance to be kept in hand, he lend a sum to the bank at interest upon no other security than their notes, for this in effect cannot be distinguished from an ordinary loan on personal security, which the Court never sanctions (f). And if the trustees ought not under the circumstances to have left so large a balance in the hands of the bankers, they will be liable for the excess beyond the proper balance (g). But trustees will not be liable for having left moneys in the hands of a respectable bank during the first year from the testator's death, when there are no special directions in the will for investment, and the estate has not been wound up (h). But they will be liable, if, during the first year they draw out of one bank money which ought, by the will, to be invested in Government stocks, and deposit it in another bank at interest, for this is an irregular investment and not a deposit; and a direction in the will that the trustees should not be liable for any banker was held not to be material (i).

Mixing the trust property with private property.

9. The trustee, wherever the trust property may be placed, must always be careful not to amalgamate it with his own, for, if he do, the cestui que trust will be held entitled to every portion of the blended property, which the trustee cannot prove to be his own (j).

SECTION III.

OF CONVERSION.

General principle.

1. EXPRESS trusts for conversion, must, of course, be strictly pursued according to the directions (a), and where the trustees have a discretionary power to convert or not, or at such time as they may think fit, the Court cannot interfere with the exercise of the power (b). But besides express trusts of this kind, there is frequently imposed upon trustees a duty to convert, not directed in terms, but arising out of the nature of the property and the relation in which the cestuis que trust stand to each other.

Implied conversion in cases of bequests of wasting property to persons in succession.

2. As a general rule, if a testator give his personal estate (c), or the residue of his personal estate (d), or the interest of his property (e), in trust for or directly to (f) several persons in succession, and the subject of the bequest is of a wasting nature, as leaseholds, long annuities, &c., the Court implies the intention that such perishable estate should assume a permanent character, and so become capable of succession. The Court accordingly, in these cases, directs a conversion into Consols (g), and trustees and executors are bound to observe the same rule in their administration of property out of Court, and if they fail to do so, will be liable as for a breach of trust (h).

Intention to give right of enjoyment in specie may be collected from the bequest.

3. But an intention that the property should be enjoyed in specie may appear from the form of the bequest, or be collected from the terms in which it is expressed. Thus if there be a specific bequest of leaseholds or of stock the specific legatee will take the rents or dividends (i). And a power of varying the

(i) Vincent v. Newcombe, Younge, 599; Lord v. Godfrey, 4 Mad. 455. But it is not necessary that the bequest should technically be specific in order to entitle the tenant for life to enjoy securities expressly given to the executors will not prejudice the right of the specific legatee, for the testator is held to have given the executors the authority, not with the intention of varying the relative rights of the legatees, but merely with the view of adding security to the property (a).

Use of word "rents."

4. Again, if after a mention of leaseholds, there is a general direction to pay rents to the tenant for life, this is held sufficient to prevent the application of the general rule (b), though it is doubtful upon the authorities whether the use of the word rents in connection with a gift containing no mention of leaseholds would have the same effect (c). A mere mention of "dividends" is certainly not sufficient to authorize the non-conversion of terminable annuities (d). But a bequest of the testator's public funds or government annuities (e), or of the "interest, dividends, or income of all monies or stock, and of all other property yielding income at the testator's death" has been held to be specific (f).

Conversion directed at a later period.

5. And if a testator negative a sale at the time of his death by authorizing or directing a conversion at a subsequent period (g); or if he use any other expressions which assume the leaseholds the income in specie; see Pickering v. Pickering, 4 M. & Cr. 299; Hubbard v. Young, 10 Beav. 205; Harris v. Poyner, 1 Drew. 181. The case of Mills v. Mills, 7 Sim. 501, is contrary to the other authorities, and is not law.

or stock to be unconverted when by the general rule it would be converted, the doctrine of conversion is excluded (a).

Rule does not assume intention of a sale.

6. The rule of the Court under which perishable property is converted does not proceed upon the assumption that the testator in fact intended his property to be sold, but is founded upon the circumstance that the testator intended the perishable property to be enjoyed by different persons in succession, which is accomplished by means of a sale (b). The Court presumes that intention unless a contrary intention appear on the face of the will, and the only difficulty is, what will constitute a sufficient indication of a contrary intention, the more recent decisions allowing smaller indications to prevail than were formerly deemed necessary (c).

Rule as to conversion where property is not wasting, but of a class not authorized by the Court.

7. The object of the rule, under which a direction to convert wasting property is implied, being to secure a fair adjustment of the rights of the tenant for life and those coming after him, it follows that where a residue which, without any express trust for conversion, is bequeathed to persons in succession, consists of property which, though not wasting, is of a class producing a high rate of interest in proportion to its money value, and liable consequently to additional risk, such as railway shares, shares of insurance or other companies, foreign bonds, or stocks, &c., the persons entitled in expectancy have a right to call for the conversion of such property into Consols (d). [But where trustees are expressly empowered to retain existing securities, the mere fact that some of the securities retained are of a hazardous nature will not disentitle the tenant for life to the receipt of the income in specie (e).]

Case of debts.

8. Even where the general estate or residue is directed to be enjoyed specifically, the tenant for life is not entitled to enjoy in specie what is not an investment, but a mere debt (f), and a special power for the executors and trustees "to continue invested any of the testator's government securities" will not justify the trustees in continuing long annuities (a).

Direction for investment of personal estate and accumulations of income in land.

9. If a testator direct that his personal estate shall be converted and laid out in a purchase of lands, to be settled upon A. for life, with remainders over, and that the interest of the personal estate shall be accumulated and laid out in a purchase of lands to be settled to the same uses, the Court to prevent the hardship that would fall upon the tenants for life, if the purchases were deferred for a long period, either from unavoidable circumstances, or from the dilatoriness of the trustee, interprets the intention in such cases to be that the accumulation should be confined to one year from the testator's death. At the expiration of that period, the Court presumes the trustees to be in a condition to invest the personal estate, and gives the tenant for life the interest from that time (b). And, conversely, if a testator devise his real estate to be sold and the produce thereof, and also the rents and profits of the said estate in the meantime, to be laid out in Bank Annuities or other securities, upon trust for A. for life, with remainders over, the accumulation of the rents is not extended beyond one year from the testator's death, but the tenant for life is entitled to them from that period (c).

Devise of real estate upon trust to sell and invest proceeds and rents until sale.

Produce during first year from testator's death.

10. From the language used by Lord Eldon, in the case of Sitwell v. Bernard (d), (in which the rule, that the accumulation, where expressly directed, extends only to one year from the testator's death, was first established,) an impression prevailed that in no case was the tenant for life entitled to the income during the first year of the fund or land directed to be converted, and both Sir John Leach (e), and Sir Thomas Plumer (f), sanctioned this doctrine by their authority. However, Lord Eldon had no intention of laying down any such rule (g), and it has since been settled that where there is no express direction to accumulate, the tenant for life has an interest in the first year's income (h), but an interest varying according to the circumstances of the case, as will appear from the following distinctions.

Income of property applied in paying legacies.

(a.) The tenant for life of a residue is not entitled to the income accruing during the delay allowed for the payment of legacies on so much of the testator's property as is subsequently applied in paying them (a). Executors, as between themselves and the persons interested in the residue, are at liberty to have recourse to any funds they please for payment of debts and legacies, but in adjusting the accounts between the tenant for life and remainderman, they must be taken to have paid the debts and legacies not out of capital only or out of income only, but with such portion of the capital, as together with the income of that portion for one year from the testator's death, was sufficient for the purpose (b). As to contingent legacies which may or may not become payable, the tenant for life is, from a rule of convenience, entitled to the income of the fund as part of the residue, until the contingency arises (c).

Where funds are in the state they ought to be.

(β.) If a testator desire that his personal estate shall be laid out and invested either in Government or real securities, in trust for A. for life, with remainders over (d), or in a purchase of lands with a direction express (e) or implied (f) for the investment thereof in the mean time in Government or real securities, and that the lands to be purchased shall be in trust for A. for life, with remainders over, the income of the Government and real securities of which the testator was possessed at the time of his death (these being the very investments contemplated by his will), belongs from the time of the death to the tenant for life.

Where the proper investment is made before the end of the year.

(γ.) If, during the first year, the conversion directed by the testator is actually made, the tenant for life is also entitled to the produce of the property, in its converted form, from the time of the conversion, as if land be directed to be sold, and the produce invested in Government or real securities (a), or money be directed to be laid out on land (b), the tenant for life is entitled to the dividends or interest in the first case, from the time of the sale and investment, and to the rents in the latter case from the time of the purchase, though made in the course of the first year.

Where the funds are not at the testator's death in the state they ought to be.

(δ.) Where, at the death of the testator, the property is not in the state in which it is directed to be, the tenant for life is, before the conversion, entitled, as the Court has now decided, not to the actual produce, but to a reasonable fruit of the property, from the death of the testator up to the time of the conversion, whether made in the course of the first year, or subsequently; as if personal estate be directed to be laid out in Government or real securities, and part of the personal estate consists of bonds, bank stock, etc. (not being Government or real securities), the tenant for life is entitled to the dividends from the death of the testator on so much Consols as such part of the personal estate, not being Government or real securities, would have purchased at the expiration of one year from the testator's death (c).

Case of ultra income, but without risk.

(ε.) Where the nonconversion is attended with any risk to the property, as in the case of bonds, &c., the remainderman, whose interest is thus imperilled, has a right to share in the extra profit of the annual produce (d); but suppose land to have

(c) Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195. In Douglas v. Congreve, 1 Keen, 410, the M. R. gave the tenant for life the actual interest of the personal estate making interest from the death of the testator until the end of one year; and in Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. M. & G. 247, the tenant for life was allowed 4 per cent. from the expiration of one year; but in the cases of Taylor v. Clark, 1 Hare, 161; Morgan v. Morgan, 14 Beav. 72; Holgate v. Jennings, 24 Beav. 623; Brown v. Gellatly, 2 L. F. & J. 29, the authority of Dimes v. Scott was followed; but in the last case (Hume v. Richardson), the Court gave the tenant for life the income of so much 3 per cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities as would have been purchased had the conversion been made at the testator's death, and not at the expiration of one year from the testator's death. In Allhusen v. Whittell, 4 L. R. Eq. 295, V. C. Wood considered the true principle to be, to ascertain what part of the testator's estate (including the income of such part during the first year from the testator's death) was required for the payment of funeral and testamentary expenses, debts, and legacies, and to give the tenant for life the income of the residue from the testator's death, any part not in a proper state of investment to be taken as invested in Consols at the death of the testator.

(d) Dimes v. Scott, 4 Russ. 195. But see Stroud v. Gwyer, 28 Beav. 130, which M. R. distinguished from Dimes v. Scott, on the ground that in the latter the irregular investment existed at the death of the testator, but in Stroud v. Gwyer, the irregular investment had been made by the trustees. This appears to be a somewhat thin distinction, [and has been doubted in a recent case, Re Hill, 50 L. J. N.S.

yielded a rental beyond what would have been the annual produce of the purchase-money, and there has been no depreciation, can the remainderman call back the extra rent received by the tenant for life, or as the remainderman gets all that was ever intended for him, viz. the undepreciated property, may the tenant for life keep the full rent? If not, then, conversely, if the land yield no annual fruit, or less than the purchase-money would yield, the tenant for life should have a claim against the remainderman (a). But if the tenant for life be also a trustee for sale, and neglect to sell, he cannot be allowed to put into his own pocket the higher annual produce which has arisen from his own laches, for no trustee can derive a profit from the exercise of his own office (b).

Gibson v. Bott.

(ζ.) In Gibson v. Bott (c), leaseholds from a defect of title could not be sold, and the Court gave the tenant for life interest at 4 per cent. from the death of the testator on the value. It does not appear from the report at what time the value was to be taken, but according to recent cases it should have been ascertained at the expiration of one year from the testator's death (d).

Capital coming in by instalments.

(η.) If the testator's estate comprise funds not immediately convertible, but receivable by instalments, such as the testator's share in a partnership assessed at a certain sum and payable by instalments, carrying interest at 5 per cent., the tenant for life is allowed 4 per cent. from the death of the testator on the value taken at the expiration of one year from the testator's death (e).

Discretion expressly given by the testator.

(θ.) If it appear from the terms of the will that the testator intended to give his trustees a discretion as to the time of conversion, which discretion has been fairly exercised, and that the tenant for life was to have the actual income until conversion, the case must be governed by the testator's intention, and not by the general rule (f). But if the power be so expressed as to negative the intention of varying by its exercise the rights of the parties, the general rule will prevail (g).

Ch. 551; 45 L. T. N.S. 126. [11. If the trust estate is improperly employed in trade, and large profits accrue, the tenant for life is only entitled to interest at 4 per cent. on the amount of capital so employed, and the rest of the profits must be added to the capital; but if the income is allowed to remain in the business and thereby conduces to subsequent accretions of profits, it would seem that the tenant for life is entitled to so much of these accretions as is attributable to his share of the income remaining in the business, and if necessary an inquiry will be directed to ascertain the amount (a).] [Trade profits.]

12. The principle upon which the Court implies in favour of those in remainder a direction to convert wasting property (namely, that both tenant for life and remainderman were intended to share in the enjoyment of it), demands equally in favour of the tenant for life a conversion of future or reversionary interests (b). Hence if a testator entitled to a reversion expectant on lives direct a conversion and investment of his personal estate, with a discretion to the trustees as to the time, and the trustees decline to sell until in event the reversion falls into possession, here had the reversion been sold at the end of one year from the testator's death, the tenant for life would have received the interest of the purchase-money, and the fund therefore, when it falls into possession, represents the capital with the interim interest; and the Court, under these circumstances [formerly gave] the tenant for life out of the capital the difference between the money [actually] received and the value of the reversion estimated at one year from the testator's death of the sum in question on the assumption of its being payable on the day, when, as afterwards happened, it actually fell into possession (c). [But this method of computation has since been slightly modified, and the method now adopted is to ascertain the sum which, put out at interest at 4 per cent. per annum on the day of the testator's death, and accumulating at compound interest at that rate with yearly rests and deducting income tax, would, with the accumulations of interest, amount on the day when the reversion falls in or is realized to the sum actually received. The sum so ascertained represents the corpus, and the difference between that sum and the sum actually received is income (d). This method of computation applies equally to any Reversionary interest converted in favour of tenant for life.

outstanding personal estate, the conversion of which the trustees in the exercise of their discretion postpone for the benefit of the estate, and which eventually falls in, as for instance a mortgage debt with arrears of interest, or arrears of an annuity with interest, or moneys payable on a life policy (a).

[Principle applied to legacies.]

13. Where a reversionary interest, which was available for the payment of pecuniary legacies, was retained unsold for many years for the benefit of the estate, it was held, when the reversion fell in, that the legatees were entitled to interest on their legacies from the expiration of one year from the testator's death (b).]

SECTION IV.

OF INVESTMENT.

[It will be convenient in the first instance to treat this subject comprehensively so as to show the general powers which trustees possess as to the investment of trust money; and secondly, to consider more in detail the circumstances under which particular investments may be made, and the care to be observed in making them.

First. Of a trustee's general powers of investment.]

Of investment of trust-money.

1. Where trust-money (c) cannot be applied, either immediately or by a short day, to the purposes of the trust, it is the duty of the trustee to make the fund productive to the cestui que trust by the investment of it on some proper security.

Trustee may not invest on personal security.

2. It was the opinion of Lord Northington that a trustee might be justified in lending on personal credit. "The lending money on a note," he said, "is not a breach of trust, without other circumstances crassæ negligentiæ" (d). But the case from which this dictum is taken has been called by Lord Eldon, from the extraordinary doctrines contained in it, "a curious document in the history of trusts" (a); and certainly it is now indisputably settled that a trustee cannot lend on personal security (b). Lord Hardwicke said, "a promissory note is evidence of a debt, but no security for it" (c); and Baron Hotham observed, that "lending on personal credit for the purpose of gaining a larger interest was a species of gaming" (d); and Lord Kenyon said, that "no rule was better established than that a trustee could not lend on mere personal security, and it ought to be rung in the ears of every one who acted in the character of trustee" (e). And it will not alter the case that the money is lent on the joint security of several obligors (f), or to a person to whom the testator himself had been in the habit of advancing money on personal security (g).

[(c) The expression "trust money," it may be observed, comprises (1) money passing into the hands of the trustees at the inception of the trust; (2) money belonging to the trust which is outstanding at its inception, and is subsequently received by the trustees; and (3) money received by the trustees as the proceeds of the conversion of trust property.]

Investment on stock of private company.

3. A trustee may not invest the trust fund in the stock of any private company, as South Sea stock, &c., for the capital depends upon the management of the governors and directors, and is subject to losses. The South Sea Company, for instance, might trade away their whole capital, provided they kept within the terms of their charter (h). Nor until Lord St. Leonards' Act (i) (to be presently mentioned), could a trustee invest in Bank stock (j). "Bank stock," said Lord Eldon, "is as safe, I trust and believe, as any Government security, but it is not Government security, and therefore this Court does not lay out or leave property in Bank stock; and what this Court will decree, it expects from trustees and executors" (k). But a trustee or executor who by mistake invested in Bank stock instead of Bank Annuities, was not liable for the actual loss in sterling value, but only for the excess of the loss beyond that which would have resulted if the investment had been made in Bank Annuities (a).

Where no express power, trustees might invest in Consols.

4. In the absence of express powers created by the settlement and irrespective of powers conferred by statute, trustees, executors, or administrators have always been held justified in investing in one of the Government or Bank Annuities; for here, as the directors have no concern with the principal, but merely superintend the payment of the dividends and interest till such time as the Government may pay off the capital, it is not in their power, by mismanagement or speculation, to hazard the property of the shareholder (b). It should be observed that all public annuities are not necessarily Government annuities (c); and of the Government or Bank Annuities, the one which the Court thought proper to adopt was the Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities (d), the fund which at the time when the rule of the Court was established was considered from its low rate of interest the least likely to be determined by redemption (e). If a trustee, who had money in hand which he ought to have rendered productive, invested it on this security, he was held to have done his duty, and not to be answerable for any subsequent depreciation (f).

Investment on other stock ordered under particular circumstances.

5. The Court [would, however, even before the Acts to be afterwards referred to], under special circumstances [have invested] in other Government Stock than Consols. Thus, a testator gave his residuary estate to executors upon trust to pay the annual produce to A. for life in equal portions at Lady-day and Michaelmas-day, and after his decease in trust for other purposes. A motion was made that the executors might invest a sum in their hands in the Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, but it was objected that the dividends of this stock were payable in January and July; whereas, if the money were laid out in the Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities, the dividends would be payable at the time directed by the testator; and Sir John Leach made the order accordingly (a).

Whether trustees might invest on any other Government security.

6. In the report of Hancom v. Allen (b) it is said, "The trust money had been laid out by the trustees in funds which sunk in their value, without any mala fides; but the same not being laid out in the fund in which the Court directs trust money to be laid out, the trustees were ordered to account for the principal and pay it into the Bank, and then that it should be laid out in Bank Three per Cent. Annuities." It might be inferred from this statement, that, if a trustee before the recent Acts had invested in any other Government Security than the Three per Cent. Consols, the Court would have held him accountable for any loss by a fall of the stock; but such a doctrine would have been extremely severe against trustees (c), and the case, as extracted from the Registrar's book, is no authority for any such proposition. Thomas Phillips, a trustee of 1500*l.*, instead of investing the money in a purchase of land and in the mean time on some sufficient security, as required by the trust, had advanced it to his brother, John Phillips, a banker, without taking any other precaution than accepting a simple acknowledgment of the loan. John Phillips continued to pay interest upon the money for some time, but eventually became insolvent, and the fund was lost. The Court, under these circumstances, called upon the trustee to make good the amount. The decision was reversed in the House of Lords, probably on the ground of the plaintiff's acquiescence (d).

Investments on mortgage.

7. With respect to investments upon mortgage Lord Harcourt said, "The case of an executor's laying out money without the indemnity of a decree, if it were on a real security and one that there was no ground at the time to suspect, had not been settled: but it was his opinion that the executor, under such circumstances, was not liable to account for the loss" (e). And Lord Hardwicke (f), and Lord Alvanley (g), appear likewise to have held that a trustee or executor would be justified in laying out the trust-fund upon well-secured real estates. But

Lord Thurlow, upon application made to him to lay out on mortgage money belonging to a lunatic, observed, that "in latter times the Court had considered it as improper to invest any part of a lunatic's estate upon private security" (a). And Sir John Leach refused a similar application with reference to the money of infants, at the same time expressing his surprise that any precedent could have been produced to the contrary (b). Where there was no power of investing on mortgage, and the trustees intending to invest on government securities, afterwards, at the instance of the tenant for life, and to procure a higher rate of interest, invested on mortgages which proved deficient, they were held to be liable for the difference to the cestui que trust in remainder. The ground of the decision, however, was, that the trustees had consulted the benefit of the tenant for life at the expense of the remainderman, and the Court gave no opinion upon the dry question, whether trustees without a power could safely invest on mortgage, but did not encourage the idea that they could (c). Trustees, until the Acts to be presently mentioned, were certainly not justified in lending upon mortgage, when by the terms of their instrument of trust they were expressly directed to invest in the funds (d).

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35. East India Stock.

8. By Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32 (e), trustees, executors, and administrators, where not expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust, were authorised to invest trust funds in the stock of the Bank of England or Ireland, or on East India stock; but the Act was held not to apply where a particular fund was settled specifically and there was no power of varying securities (f). The section was rightly held by Sir John Romilly, M. R. (g), (in accordance with the view taken by V. C. Kindersley, in reference to the 27th section (h), but in opposition to V. C. Stuart (i)), not to apply to trusts created by an instrument dated before the Act, but by the Amendment Act 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 12, the 32nd section of the original Act was made retrospective.

The Court refused under this Act to sanction an investment in stock created under the India Loan Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 39 (a), but by 30 & 31 Vict. c. 132, s. 1, the words East India stock were to be taken to include as well the old East India stock as "East India stock charged on the revenues of India, and created under and by virtue of any Act of Parliament," passed on or after the 13th day of August, 1859 (b). 30 & 31 Vict. c. 132.

The stock under the India Loan Act was issued under the name of India, and not of East India stock, and hence a doubt was suggested whether India stock was within the purview of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 132, but it is conceived that the doubt was purely technical, and without solid foundation. [India Loan Acts.]

[The capital stocks created under the subsequent East India Loan Acts were, by those Acts, expressly directed to be deemed to be East India stock within 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32, unless and until Parliament should otherwise provide (c). By the Conversion of India Stock Act, 1887 (d), provision has been made for the conversion of India 4 per cent. stock into India 3½ per cent. stock; and by sec. 3, a power, whether subject or not to any restrictions or conditions, to invest in India 4 per cent. stock is to extend to authorise investment, subject to the same conditions and restrictions (if any), in India 3½ per cent. stock. By section 2, where a trustee of the converted stock has no power to vary investments, the consent of every person interested is required for the purpose of an exchange of such stock for the new stock; and in the case of an infant or person of unsound mind, the consent must be that of his guardian, committee, or curator bonis, or of a judge of the Chancery Division in England and Ireland, or of the Court of Session in Scotland.]

further provided (a) that when a trustee, executor, or administrator, should not "by some instrument creating his trust be expressly forbidden to invest any trust fund on real securities in any part of the United Kingdom," he should be at liberty to make such investment, provided it were in other respects reasonable and proper. Under this enactment, therefore, trustees might lend on real security in England or Wales, or Ireland, but not in the Isle of Man, and as the Act by the last section was not to extend to Scotland, and as the Scotch real property law is quite different from the English, trustees could not be advised to lend money on real security in Scotland (b).

Scotland.

23 & 24 Vict. c. 38.

9. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 11 (c), and the general order of February, 1861, subsequently mentioned, trustees having power to invest on Government or Parliamentary securities were expressly authorised to invest not only in Consols, but also in Three per Cent. Reduced Annuities and New Three per Cent. Annuities, and might also invest on real securities in England or Wales, and such investments might be made by corporations and trustees holding moneys in trust for any public or charitable purpose notwithstanding the statutes of mortmain (d).

Investments by the Court.

10. Previously to these Acts the Court had, even where an express power existed to lend on real security, refused to exercise it by sanctioning a loan on mortgage, on the ground that in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred the expense of the mortgage more than counterbalanced the increase of income (e). But the rule was afterwards relaxed (f).

23 & 24 Vict. c. 38.

Consolidated, or Reduced, or New Bank Annuities, or in such other stocks, funds, or securities" as the Court should think fit; and by the following section, trustees, executors, or administrators, "having power to invest their trust funds upon General order, as to investment of cash under control of Court.

12. A General Order, dated February 1, 1861, was issued under the powers of this Act, but was annulled by the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, its place being supplied, in a slightly modified form, by Order 22, Rules 17 and 18, as follows :—

R. 17. "Cash under the control of, or subject to the order of, the Court may be invested in Bank stock, East India stock, Exchequer bills, and 2*l.* 10*s.* per cent. Annuities, and upon mortgage of freehold and copyhold estates respectively in England and Wales, as well as in Consolidated, Reduced, and New 3*l.* per cent. Annuities."

Meaning of East India Stock.

13. It was at one time considered that the East India stock referred to in the Order of 1st February, 1861, was the old East India stock (i.e. the capital stock of the East India Company), as the new loan had not then acquired the distinctive name of East India stock. But in a case in the Court of Appeal, the late M. R. stated that it had always been held that new East India stock was within the intention of the General Order, and it was held that new 3*l.* 10*s.* per cent. East India stock created under the powers of 42 & 43 Vict. c. 60, was within the Order (b).

Applications under 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38.

The old East India stock has been redeemed or commuted, and has ceased to exist (c), and the loans under the several East India Loan Acts are (as we have seen) now known as East India stock.

14. Upon applications under the Order of 1st February, 1861, the Court at first sanctioned investments in East India stock (d)

[(a) In this section the power is a general one, without the exception contained in 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32, and it will not be overruled by an express direction in the instrument creating the trust that the investments are to be confined to those enumerated therein; In re Wedderburn's Trusts, 9 Ch. D. 112. As to the reinvestment of stock converted or exchanged into new stock under 51 Vict. c. 2, see post, p. 338.]

upon the petition of the tenant for life, even though the market price of investment exceeded, as it commonly did, the fixed rate at which the stock would be redeemable in 1874, viz. 200*l.* per cent (a). But in a subsequent case Lord Chancellor Campbell and the Lords Justices upon appeal concurred in refusing the application, on the ground that it would work an injury to the remainderman. Lord Campbell observed that no more precise rule could safely be laid down than "that in the absence of any special circumstances which might make the desired transfer asked by the tenant for life beneficial to those in remainder, irrespective of pecuniary calculations, the transfer ought not to be permitted, if on pecuniary calculations it might be injurious to those in remainder." And Turner, L.J., appears to have assented to this view, giving as an instance in which the Court might properly make such investment, where "from the exigency of a family it would be desirable for the children that the income of the parents should be increased." But he added that the decision was "not intended to embarrass trustees where the fund was not in Court, and that they would, in making such an investment, be entitled to the protection of the Court if they acted bonâ fide to the best of their discretion" (b).

Accordingly where trustees were directed to invest in the public stocks or funds, and they retained English and Irish Bank stock and East India stock in specie, it was held (there being no imputation on their bona fides) that they had not exceeded their duty, and the tenant for life was declared to be entitled to the actual income which had arisen from those securities since the passing of the Act which authorised them, but not to the actual income which had accrued before the passing of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 (c).

And where Bank stock stood settled upon A. for life, with remainder to his children, if any, with remainder to certain persons absolutely, and A. (who had been married twenty-seven years without issue) applied, with the consent of the ultimate remain-

This cause was heard on appeal before L.J.J. on 17th July, 1861, when L. J. Knight Bruce thought the order should be sustained on special grounds, so that any expression of opinion by L. J. Turner became unnecessary; but both L.JJ. assented to the principle laid down in Cockburn v. Peel, 3 De G. F. & J. 170.

dermen, for an investment in East India stock, the M. R. said he never sanctioned such an investment where infants were interested, unless an increase of income was absolutely required for their maintenance; but considering the improbability of there being children in that case, he made the order (a).

In another case the tenant for life of a residue applied for the sale of Bank Annuities and the investment of the proceeds upon Bank stock, and the Court, after taking time to consider, declined to make any order, on the ground that the exercise of the power by the Court was discretionary, and that there were no special circumstances to call for such a change of investment (b).

But where a tenant for life had a wife and five children, and his income, exclusive of the dividends of the fund in Court (6357*l.* 15*s.* 2*d.* Consols), was only 70*l.* per annum, the Court thought these circumstances sufficient to justify an investment in Bank stock, and made the order accordingly (c).

So where the tenant for life was suffering from ill-health and was straitened in his circumstances, and asked for an investment of one moiety in India stock and the other moiety in Bank stock, the Court assented to the prayer, with the qualification that as investment in India stock involved a possible loss of capital, the whole fund should be invested in Bank stock (d).

So where a fund was charged with an annuity of 500*l.* per annum, and was insufficient for its purpose, the Court, though it would not have listened to an application with the mere view of augmenting the income of the tenant for life, directed an investment in East India stock, in order to aid the primary intention of providing for the annuity (e).

Powers in Acts of Parliament.

[15. There was great conflict of opinion as to whether] the powers conferred by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38 applied to moneys paid into Court under Acts of Parliament directing the moneys to be invested on securities other than those mentioned in the Act under consideration; [but the question was finally settled in favour of the application of the powers (f).]

funds in the purchase of annuities of Class B. thereby authorised to be created (a). Under this section the Court has, upon the application of a tenant for life, sanctioned the conversion into annuities of Class B. of Bank Annuities in Court (b).

[Church trustees.]

20. Church trustees incorporated under the Compulsory Church Rate Abolition Act, 1868, are by that Act empowered to invest any funds in their hands in Government or real securities (c).

Consent.

21. Powers of investment are generally to be exercised with the consent of the tenant for life, and it was doubted whether the several Acts enlarging the power of trustees apply where such consent is required. It is conceived, however, that the effect of the Acts was to authorise trustees to invest on the extended securities, provided the investments were accompanied with all the conditions required for investment upon the securities specified in the settlement. Any other construction would be a trap into which many trustees must already have fallen. [And under the Trust Investment Act, 1889, to be presently noticed, all difficulty on this head is removed.

[Settled Land Act.]

22. Under sections 21 and 32 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, all moneys in Court (d) which are liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to a settlement may be "invested on Government securities, or on other securities on which the trustees of the settlement are by the settlement or by law authorised to invest trust money of the settlement, or on the security of the bonds, mortgages, or debentures, or in the purchase of the debenture stock of any railway company in Great Britain or Ireland incorporated by special Act of Parliament, and having for ten years next before the date of investment paid a dividend on its ordinary stock or shares."

Under these sections moneys in Court which have arisen from the purchase under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, of land belonging absolutely to a charity, have been invested in railway debenture stock (e).

By section 33 of the same Act, where under a settlement money is in the hands of trustees, and is liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, then, in addition to such powers of dealing therewith as the trustees have independently of the Act, they may, at the option of the tenant for life, invest the same as above mentioned.

[Investment not permitted by terms of will.]

23. Where under a will money was bequeathed to trustees in trust to lay it out in the purchase of real estate, to be settled in strict settlement, with a direction that until the purchase "the legacy should be invested in Government or real securities, but not in any other mode of investment," it was held that the trustees, on the direction of the tenant for life, might invest the legacy in debenture stock (a), for this was only doing directly what the tenant for life could have done circuitously under the powers of the Act, by reselling the estate when purchased, and directing the investment of the money in the manner proposed. And in another case where the will contained no clause authorising an interim investment, the Court sanctioned the postponement of the purchase of real estate in Ireland until such a purchase could be prudently effected, and allowed an interim investment under section 21 (b).]

[Conversion of Government annuities.]

24. [By the National Debt (Conversion) Act, 1888 (c), provision is made for the conversion and exchange of Three per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities, Three per Cent. Reduced Bank Annuities, and New Three per Cent. Annuities into a new Government stock of a lower denomination which is to be called Two and Three-quarters per Cent. Consolidated Stock until the 6th of April, 1903, and thereafter Two and a Half per Cent. Consolidated Stock (d), and trustees having power to invest in the old stocks are empowered to invest in the new stock in lieu thereof (e). The new stock yields dividends, payable quarterly, at the rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. until the 4th of April, 1903, and $2\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. after that date (f); and is not to be redeemable until the 8th of April, 1923, after which date it will be redeemable at par in such manner as Parliament shall direct (g). Special provision is made for the protection of trustees of stock appropriated to provide annuities (h), and it is enacted (i) that when any stock converted or exchanged by virtue of the Act into new stock, is held by a trustee, such trustee shall be at liberty to sell the same, and to invest the proceeds in any of the securities for the time being authorised for the investment of cash under the control of the High Court (a), notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in the instrument creating the trust.

The conversion of the new Three per Cent. stock was effected on the 29th of March, 1888, and all holders of that stock who had not by that date dissented from the conversion received in lieu thereof an equal nominal amount of the new stock. The redemption of the Consolidated Three per Cent. Annuities and the Reduced Three per Cent. Annuities was effected on the 6th of July, 1889, and all holders of such stock on that day were paid off.

[Power to hold stock on different accounts.]

By section 10 of the same Act it is provided that in the registers of new stock the Bank shall allow any holder or joint holders to have more than one account, provided that each account is distinguished either by a number or by such other designation as may be directed by the Bank, and that the Bank shall not be required to permit more than four accounts to be opened in the same name or names. This provision will be convenient for trustees holding several funds on distinct trusts, and will relieve them from the necessity of resorting to the devices of varying the order of names in the account in the bank books (b).

[Recent order of Court as to investment of cash under its control.]

25. By an order of Court of August, 1888 (which was to come into operation on the 24th of October, 1888), Order XXII. r. 17, of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, above referred to was superseded (c), but the new order was annulled and replaced by an Order dated the 14th of November, 1888, which came into operation on the 26th of that month. That order provides as follows:—

"Cash under the control of or subject to the order of the Court may be invested in the following stocks, funds, or securities; namely—

Two and Three-quarters per Cent. Consolidated Stock (to be called after the 5th of April, 1903, Two and a Half per Cent. Consolidated Stock);

[(c) It is believed that the Paymaster General did not make any investments in reliance on the authority of this order. Certain investments in colonial stock authorised by the order of August are not authorised by that of November, and if any investments in such stock have been made by trustees between October 24th and November 24th, 1888, there may be some question as to their propriety. any express prohibition in the instrument creating the trust, the power of varying investments thereby given applies to investments of the classes specified in clauses (a.) to (o.) existing previously to and not made under the Act, as well as to the like investments when made under the powers of the Act, so that trustees under an instrument which contains no power to vary securities, may sell Government stocks purchased previously to the Act for the purpose of investing in any of the other securities which the Act authorises (a).

[But power to vary may still be necessary.]

However, in the case cited it was observed by Kay, J. (b), that even if, as matter of construction, the whole section be read into the particular will or settlement, "there might be under the will or settlement investments of descriptions not mentioned in the section, and, if the will or settlement contained no power to vary, they would not be variable under the power given in this section." Wherever, therefore, a power of investment of a wider character than that contained in the section is conferred upon the trustees of an instrument it will be desirable to insert the usual words, enabling them to vary investments.

[Trustees within the meaning of the Act.]

A corporation incorporated by a special Act, holding funds for charitable purposes and empowered to invest the same are trustees within the meaning of the Act (c); but not so trustees holding moneys which belong to a building society, and are to be dealt with only under the direction of the board of directors (d), nor yet the directors themselves (e).

[Purchase of redeemable stocks.]

Section 4 of the same Act enacts: "(1) It shall be lawful for a trustee under the powers of this Act to invest in any of the stocks, funds, shares, or securities mentioned or referred to in section 3 of this Act, notwithstanding that the same may be redeemable, and that the price exceeds the redemption value. fifteen years of the date of purchase at par or at some other fixed rate, or to purchase any such stock as is mentioned or referred to in the sub-sections aforesaid, which is liable to be redeemed at par or at some other fixed rate, at a price exceeding fifteen per centum above par or such other fixed rate. (3) It shall be lawful for a trustee to retain until redemption any redeemable stock, fund, or security which may have been purchased in accordance with the powers of this Act." By section 5, "Every power conferred by this Act shall be exercised according to the discretion of the trustee, but subject to any consent required by the instrument (if any) creating the trust with respect to the investment of the trust funds." By section 9, for the purposes of the Act, "the expression 'trustee' shall include an executor or administrator, and a trustee whose trust arises by construction or implication of law as well as an express trustee; the expression 'stock' shall include fully paid-up shares," and "the expression 'instrument' shall include a private Act of Parliament."

[Discretion of the trustee.]

Secondly. Of particular investments.

Trustee, if expressly empowered, may lend on personal security.

1. A trustee may lend even on personal security, where he is expressly empowered to do so by the instrument creating the trust (a). But no such authority is communicated by a direction to place out the money at interest at the trustee's discretion (b), or on such good security as the trustee can procure, and may think safe (c). And if joint trustees be empowered to lend on personal security, they may not lend to one of themselves, for the settlor must be taken to rely upon the united vigilance of all the trustees with respect to the solvency of the borrower (d): and trustees having a power, with the consent of the tenant for life, to lend on personal security, cannot lend on personal security to the tenant for life himself (e). And when the Court has assumed the administration of the estate by the institution of a suit, it has declined to direct an investment on personal security, though there was a power to lay out on either personal or Government security, but has ordered all future investments to be made on Government security (a).

A power to lend on personal security may mean on the security of personal property, or the security of the personal undertaking of the borrower, and where the trustees had the last-mentioned power and lent upon a note of hand, the Court allowed the loan, but directed a bond to be taken (b).

Where empowered to lend on personal security, trustee may not accommodate a person.

2. Where the trustees of a sum of money for A. for life, remainder for her children, were authorised by the settlement to lend the trust fund upon real or personal security as should be thought good and sufficient, and the trustees lent it to a person in trade whom A. had married, and the money was lost, they were made responsible for the amount. Sir William Grant said, "The authority did not extend to an accommodation: it was evident the trustees had, upon the marriage, been induced to accommodate the husband with the sum, which they had no power to do" (c). And in another case, where a trustee was even required at the request of the wife to advance money to the husband upon his bond, and the husband took the benefit of the Insolvent Act, and the wife requested the trustee to advance 80*l.* to the husband upon his bond, and the trustee refusing, the wife filed her bill to have the trustee removed, the Court said, "that so total a change had taken place in the circumstances and position of the husband, that the clause in question became no longer applicable to him and ceased to have any effect, and the trustee had done his duty when he refused to lend the money" (d).

Tenant for life not to be favoured.

3. No applications from cestuis que trust to their trustees are so frequent as for a more productive investment for the benefit of the tenant for life. In these cases the trustees must remember that any special power which the settlement may give them was not created for the purpose of favouring one party more than another, but for the benefit of all, and that if they lend themselves improperly to the views of the tenant for life, at the expense of the remaindermen, they will be held personally responsible (e); and where trustees have the ordinary power of

(c) Langston v. Ollivant, G. Coop. 33. In this case, as the person to whom the money was lent was a trader, it has been inferred that under a power to lend on personal security the trustee cannot lend to a trader, but the Court has never yet gone to that extent.

varying securities with the consent of the tenant for life, the trustees must consider the intention to be that as the control is given to the tenant for life for his protection, so the trustees have a particular discretion reposed in them for the protection of the remaindermen (a). And on the other hand where every change of investment is to be with the consent of the tenant for life, and he withholds his consent though the fund is in danger, the trustee can proceed in equity and compel a change of investment, against the wishes of the tenant for life (b). [And in one case the Court refused to hear counsel for trustees in support of an application by the tenant for life whose interest was opposed to those of the remaindermen (c).]

Consent.

4. All the conditions annexed to the power must be strictly observed, as if the authority be to lend to the husband with the consent of the wife, the trustees cannot make the advance on their own discretion, and take the consent of the wife at a subsequent period (d). And if the consent of two trustees be required, the consent of one of them does not operate as the consent of both (e). And where the consent of a married woman was necessary to authorise an investment with the sanction of the Court, a petition by the husband and wife praying for such investment was no consent by the wife, for the petition was regarded as that of the husband only (f), nor will a married woman be deemed to have consented to an investment by joining in a deed of appointment of new trustees, in which such an investment is recited or noticed, for the deed is executed alio intuitu (g). Where the consent of two trustees is not required to be by deed, one may consent by deed and the other by parol (h). Where the nature and object of the power and the circumstances of the case point to a previous or contemporaneous consent, then such previous or contemporaneous consent is necessary although not expressly required by the terms of the power (a). If for instance, a consent be required for the substitution of one estate for another, the consent must precede or at all events accompany the execution of the power, for the question must be determined by the relative values of the two estates, at the time of substitution (b). [And a consent by a wife to the exercise by the trustees of a power to lend the trust money to her husband cannot be given prospectively (c).] But if an investment has been made without the required consent, a cestui que trust cannot complain of it, who, being sui juris at the time, had acquiesced in and adopted the investment (d).

Investment in trade.

5. A power to "invest at the discretion of the trustees" will not authorise an investment on the securities of the United States, or of the railway companies in that country (e), and a power "to place out at interest, or other way of improvement," will not authorise an investment of the money in any trading concern (f); or in fact any investment but a Government or real or other unobjectionable security (g); but it has been held that a direction not to "invest" but to "employ" the money, savours of a trading concern (h); but the distinction appears too thin to be relied upon with safety.

Loan by way of annuity.

6. Upon a marriage the wife's portion was settled upon the intended husband and wife for their respective lives, with remainder to the issue, and a power was given to the trustees to "call in and lay out the money at greater interest if they could." The trustees sold out stock to the amount of 400*l*., and laid it out in the purchase of an annuity for one life, and insured the life, and Lord Manners said the purchase of the annuity was not a proper disposition of a trust fund settled as this was (i).

Loans upon shares of companies.

7. A power to invest "upon security of the funds of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament," will not authorise an investment in "Great Northern Preference shares," which are not a security upon the property of the company, but a participation in the partnership (j). [But a power to invest on the securities of any "railway or other public company" includes securities of companies incorporated under the Companies Acts, as such companies are incorporated by public statute, the instruments forming their constitution are accessible to the public, and their shares are transferable to the public (a); and a power to invest in the shares of a "company incorporated by Act of Parliament" was held to extend to shares in The London Assurance, a company constituted under a charter which derived its force from a preceding Act of Parliament (b).]

Debentures.

8. A power to lend on the debentures (c) of a public company did not, it is conceived, authorise an investment on debenture stock, for the settlor in allowing debentures relied on the liability of the company to pay the capital; but in debenture stock the dividend only can be recovered, and there are no means of realising the capital but by transfer, and the value in the market may have greatly sunk. Debenture bonds are a temporary loan, but debenture stock is perpetual.

34 Vict. c. 27.

But by 34 Vict. c. 27 (29 June, 1871), it was enacted that where power had been before the passing of the Act or should at any time thereafter be given to trustees to invest in the mortgages or bonds of a railway or other company, such power should, unless the contrary be expressed in the instrument, be deemed to include a power to invest in the debenture stock of a railway or other company, and an investment in debenture stock may now be made accordingly.

[28 & 29 Vict. c. 78.]

9. [By the Mortgage Debenture Act, 1865, (d) trustees having a general power to invest trust moneys in or upon the security of shares, stocks, mortgages, bonds, or debentures of companies incorporated by or acting under the authority of an Act of Parliament, are empowered to invest such moneys on the security of mortgage debentures issued under and in accordance with the provisions of that Act.]

[East India Unclaimed Stock Act, 1885.]

[10. By the East India Unclaimed Stock Act, 1885, 48 & 49 Vict. c. 25, s. 23, Indian railway companies are empowered, with the sanction of the Secretary of State, and subject to such regulations and conditions as he may think fit to impose, to issue debenture bonds payable to bearer, which shall be negotiable by delivery; but the section provides that trustees (unless expressly authorised by the terms of their trust to hold securities payable to bearer) may not hold such debenture bonds.]

[11. By "The Local Loans Act, 1875," 38 & 39 Vict. c. 83, s. 27, trustees or other persons for the time being authorised or directed to invest in the debentures or debenture stock of any railway or other company, unless the contrary is expressed in the instrument, are empowered to invest in any nominal debentures or nominal debenture stock issued under the Act (a). And a similar power is frequently given by Local Acts to invest in corporation and county stocks issued thereunder, but a proviso is sometimes added to prevent the investment in redeemable stock from being made at a price exceeding its redemption value (b).] [Local Loans Act.]

12. And where a fund is settled upon trust for one for life with remainders over, a power to "invest upon Government real or personal security, or in such stocks, funds, or shares, as the trustees in their absolute discretion may think fit," will not authorize a purchase of ordinary consolidated stock, or of preference or guaranteed stock of a terminable character (c). Terminable securities.

13. If a testator direct his "personal estate invested in Government or other securities in bonds or shares of whatever nature or kind, to be held in the same or the like investments," the executors are justified in retaining in specie Victoria bonds, Brazilian and Russian bonds, and English and Indian Railway stock, and East India stock (d). [If shares in a banking company are given to trustees "upon trust to permit them to remain in their then state of investment," but the Company is reconstituted, and the shares which were originally fully paid up with unlimited liability are converted into shares of limited liability, but with a margin of uncalled capital, the authority to retain the shares is exhausted, as they have ceased to be in the same state of investment (e).] Direction to retain investments.

14. If a trust fund be given to three trustees, with power to sell out and invest in the shares of a company, the trustees may Shares which must stand in one name only.

[(b) A debenture payable to a person named, his executors, administrators, and assigns, is in the Act referred to as a nominal debenture (s. 5), and debenture stock in respect of which a stock certificate has not been issued is referred to as nominal debenture stock (s. 6).]

not sell out and invest in the shares of a company which requires the shares to be held by a single person. But if shares in such a company be specifically bequeathed to three trustees, they are justified from the nature of the case in taking the shares in the name of one of themselves (a).

Exchequer bills.

15. Where moneys paid into Court were directed by an Act to be invested in "Three per cent. Consols, or Three per cent. Reduced, or any Government securities," the Court refused to allow an investment on Exchequer bills as not within the meaning of the Act (b); but where a trustee had engaged to lend a sum upon mortgage, which was authorised by the powers of the will, and instead of leaving the money idle at his bankers, laid it out in Exchequer bills as a temporary investment, and productive of interest with little fluctuation of value during the interval while the mortgage was in preparation, the Court held that such a dealing with the funds was justifiable (c); and it has since been ruled that Exchequer bills do fall within the description of Government securities (d); and they were expressly authorised as an investment by 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 11, and the general order [of 1861, by the Rule of the Supreme Court, November, 1888, and by the Trust Investment Act, 1889, already referred to (e).]

Foreign securities.

16. Stock of the United States, and even the bonds and debentures of the particular states, come under the description of "foreign funds," but not so the bonds or debentures of municipal towns or railway companies abroad (f). [And where a power was given to trustees to invest "upon any of the stocks or funds of the Government of the United States of America or of the Government of France, or any other Foreign Government," it was held that investments in New York and Ohio stocks and Georgia bonds were authorised by the power (g).] And where trustees were empowered to "continue or change securities from time to time, as to the majority should seem meet," and they proposed to call in certain securities and invest in American Government and American railway securities, the Court in an administration suit would not allow the trustees to exercise their discretion in this way, though great part of the testator's own estate was left by him thus invested (a). [But where a testator gave all his residue to trustees upon trust to invest in the parliamentary stocks or funds, or upon real securities, and the will contained a proviso authorising the trustees, as often as they should think it expedient so to do, to sell out, transfer or otherwise vary the trust moneys, funds, and securities, and to invest the same in or on any other funds or securities whatsoever, it was held that the trustees were acting within their powers in selling out New Three per cent. annuities, and investing the proceeds in Russian Railway bonds and Egyptian bonds (b).

[Indian railways.]

17. The Court has even in an administration action sanctioned the conversion of Bank Annuities into East India Railway stock annuity B, and into Scinde, Punjaub and Delhi Railway 5*l.* per cent. guaranteed stock, where the will authorised an investment in the guaranteed stock of any Railway Company in India, notwithstanding that the Scinde, Punjaub and Delhi Railway was, like most of the Indian Railways, held only on a lease under Government (c).

[Shares in companies.]

18. However large the power of investment may be it is the duty of the trustees to exercise their discretion as to the choice of investment, and they should, before investing in the shares of a company, have regard to its constitution and its rights against its shareholders (d). But if their discretion be exercised bonâ fide, the mere fact that the shares are not fully paid up will not make the investment an improper one (e).]

Greek bonds.

19. Where a testator directed all his property, except ready money or moneys in the funds, to be converted, and the proceeds to be invested in Three per cent. Consols or other Government securities in England, it was held that Greek bonds, though guaranteed by this country, were not comprehended in the words "funds," and that they ought to be converted, though the Court disavowed any intention of saying that bonds of that description might not, in other cases, be deemed Government securities (f).

Colony or foreign country.

20. A power to invest on "the bonds, debentures, or other securities, or the stocks or funds of any colony or foreign country," will not authorise an investment upon the Preference Bonds of a Foreign Railway Company, though a sinking fund for paying off the capital expended, and the payment of the interest in the meantime, are guaranteed by the foreign government (a). Where trustees are empowered to invest "in such mode or modes of investment as they in their uncontrolled discretion shall think proper," they cannot be made personally liable for investments made bonâ fide in the purchase of bonds of a foreign government, bonds of a colonial railway company, or shares of a bank on which there is a further liability; but if an action is pending for the administration of the estate, the Court will not allow such investments to be retained; but has under such a power authorised an investment in the inscribed stocks of the Government of New Zealand, Victoria, and New South Wales (b).]

[Colonial stock.]

[21. By the Colonial Stock Act, 1877 (c), trustees are not to apply for or hold stock certificates payable to bearer issued under that Act, unless expressly authorised to do so by the terms of their trust.]

[Isle of Man stock.]

[22. By the Isle of Man Stock Act, 1880 (d), trustees in that island, and any trustees authorised or directed to invest in the securities of the government of a colony, may, unless expressly prohibited, invest in any securities of the Government of the Isle of Man.]

East India stock.

23. Government or Parliamentary stocks or funds are such as are managed by Parliament, or paid out of the revenues of the British Government, or at least guaranteed by it, and therefore East India stock, under the charter of the East India Company, as possessing none of these requisites, was never a Government stock (e).

Trustees, where there is power to vary, may sell out stock and invest on mortgage.

24. Trustees may be, and generally are, expressly empowered to invest on real as well as Government security, and where this was the case, and there was a power to vary securities (f),

[(f) As to the power to vary investments under the Trust Investment Act, 1889, section 3, see ante, p. 342.]

the trustees might safely sell out Three per cent. Bank Annuities, and invest the proceeds on a mortgage; for, in such a case, although the tenant for life may obtain a higher rate of interest, yet no injury is done to the remainderman, as the capital is a constant quantity, and on the tenant for life's death the remainderman himself will have the benefit. A notion is sometimes entertained that where the stock has become depreciated since the original purchase of it by the trustees, the trustees cannot sell out the stock and lend the money on mortgage without being answerable for the difference between the bought and the sale price. But there is no ground for this apprehension, for if the trust authorise the purchase of stock at all, the trustees cannot be wrong in dealing with it at the market price of the day. No doubt if there were a sudden fall under peculiar circumstances, the trustees should not, without good reason, sell out at the very moment of casual depreciation, but if the power be bonâ fide exercised, the mere fact of a depreciation below the bought price cannot per se constitute a breach of duty.

Apportionment in respect of dividends upon a change of investment.

25. The trustees in changing the investment should have regard to the tenant for life's interest in the income. The stock, for instance, should be sold so as to make the time of accruer of the last dividend the starting-point as nearly as possible for the commencement of the interest on the mortgage. However, if the sale of the stock be made on an intermediate day between two dividends, although the price may be enhanced by the near approach of the dividend, it is not the practice to pay to the tenant for life the estimated amount of the current dividend out of the proceeds (a), although it was held in one case under very special circumstances, that the tenant for life was entitled to an apportionment (b). [And so after a purchase of stock between two dividend days the tenant for life will be entitled to the whole dividend which is declared on the dividend day subsequent to the purchase (c).]

Mortgage to replace stock and pay interim dividends.

26. Under the ordinary power of varying securities, a trustee would not be justified in lending a sum of stock upon a mortgage of real estate, conditioned for the replacement of the specific stock at a future day, and the payment of half-yearly sums equal to what would have been the dividends in the meantime. For the exercise of the power must be supposed to be beneficial to the parties interested, or some of them; whereas, in this case, it is difficult to point out what possible advantage can accrue, though the dividends be paid and the stock replaced. Nothing more is secured to the trust than would have been the effect of the original investment had it remained in statu quo; while a Government security is changed for the risk of a private security, and perhaps some expense incurred, and all this for no purpose. In short, such an arrangement would look like an accommodation to a friend, rather than as an investment in furtherance of the trust (a).

Mortgage to replace stock and pay interim interest.

27. The case is not so objectionable when the stock is to be replaced, and in the meantime interest exceeding the dividend is to be paid on the amount produced by the sale; for here, one of the persons whose interest is to be consulted, viz., the tenant for life, does receive a benefit in præsenti, and the remainderman, if he outlive the tenant for life and the mortgage continue so long, will derive the same advantage (b).

[Care to be observed in lending on mortgage.]

28. [The question, already adverted to (c), as to the degree of care and prudence which a trustee is called upon to exercise in the conduct of the trust is in no case of more prominent importance than when he is called upon to invest trust moneys on mortgage or other private securities. A clear and authoritative statement of the law upon this subject, as expounded in modern decisions, is to be found in the following words of Lord Watson:—

"As a general rule the law requires of a trustee no higher degree of diligence in the execution of his office than a man of ordinary prudence would exercise in the management of his own private affairs. Yet he is not allowed the same discretion in investing the moneys of the trust as if he were a person sui juris dealing with his own estate. Business men of ordinary prudence may, and frequently do, select investments which are more or less of a speculative character; but it is the duty of a trustee to confine himself to the class of investments which are permitted by the trust, and likewise to avoid all

(a) Since the above remarks were written, judicial opinions have been expressed to this effect; Pell v. De Winton, 2 De G. & J. 18; Whitney v. Smith, 4 L. R. Ch. App. 519, 521.

[(b) Under 51 Vict. c. 2, s. 21 and preamble and s. 2 (4), an agreement to transfer any of the old 3 per cent. Government stocks may be satisfied by a transfer of new ($2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent.) consols.]

investments of that class which are attended with hazard. So long as he acts in the honest observance of those limitations, the general rule already stated will apply" (a).]

Attention to value and title in lending on mortgage.

29. When trustees propose to lend upon mortgage, their attention should be directed to two leading topics—the [value and] sufficiency of the [security] and the title of the borrower (b). Trustees who accept a security without making proper inquiries as to its nature and adequacy, though it may have been previously valued by a surveyor (c); or who rely upon a valuation made by a surveyor employed by the mortgagor, without having a survey made by a valuer employed by themselves, will be held personally liable for any deficiency of the security (d).

[Value.]

30. [In reference to the question of value there are two matters of primary importance—the mode in which the value is to be ascertained, and the proportion of the ascertained value which the trustee is justified in lending. Both these matters are now regulated by sub-section 1 of section 4 of the Trustee Act, 1888 (e), an enactment which applies to (f) "transfers of existing securities as well as to new securities, and to investments made as well before as after the passing of the Act" (Dec. 24, 1888) except where some action or other proceeding is pending with reference thereto at the passing of the Act." This important sub-section is as follows:—

[Trustee Act, 1888.]

"No trustee (g) lending money upon the security of any pro-

D. 351, at p. 367; Sheffield Society v. Aizlewood, 44 Ch. D. 412, at p. 454. In applying this principle, it must, however, be borne in mind that "the business of the trustee, and the business which the ordinary prudent man is supposed to be conducting for himself, is the business of investing money for the benefit of persons who are to enjoy it at some future time, and not for the sole benefit of the person entitled to the present income. The duty of a trustee is not to take such care only as a prudent man would take if he had only himself to consider; the duty rather is to take such care as an ordinary prudent man would take if he were minded to make an investment for the benefit of other people for whom he felt morally bound to provide." Per Lindley, L.J., Re Whiteley, 33 Ch. [(f) Sec. 4, sub-s. 4.]

[(g) The expression "trustee" by sec. 1, sub-s. 3, is to be deemed to include an executor or administrator and a trustee whose trust arises by construcperty shall be chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of the proportion borne by the amount of the loan to the value of such property at the time when the loan was made, provided that it shall appear to the Court that in making such loan the trustee was acting upon a report as to the value of the property made by a person whom the trustee reasonably believed to be an able practical surveyor or valuer, instructed and employed independently of any owner of the property, whether such surveyor or valuer carried on business in the locality where the property is situate or elsewhere, and that the amount of the loan does not exceed two equal third parts of the value of the property as stated in such report, and that the loan was made under the advice of such surveyor or valuer expressed in such report. And this section shall apply to a loan upon any property of any tenure, whether agricultural or house or other property, on which the trustee can lawfully lend."

[Report as to value.]

31. In order that the trustee should bring himself within the protection of this enactment, it is an essential condition that he should obtain such a report as to value as the statute indicates. The first requisite is that the trustee should have a reasonable belief that the person appointed is an able, practical surveyor or valuer. The choice of the surveyor is a matter upon which the trustee is bound to exercise his own judgment (a), and he cannot properly leave the nomination to his solicitor (b). But it is no longer necessary (c) that the surveyor should be possessed of special knowledge of the locality in which the property is situate, though of course in many cases the possession of such knowledge may be very material with regard to his ability (d). As to the mode of employment of the surveyor, the statute requires, as did in effect the pre-existing law, that he should be instructed and employed independently of any owner of the property, and every precaution should be taken to secure the services of an entirely independent person who can in no sense be regarded as instructed and employed on behalf of, or even recommended by (e), the tion or implication of law as well as an express trustee, but not the official trustee of charitable funds. And by sub-s. 4 the provisions of the Act relating to a trustee are to apply as well to several joint trustees as to a sole trustee; see Moore v. Knight, (1891) 1 Ch. 547, at p. 553.]

mortgagor. And he should be paid by the trustee, although the charge is ultimately to be borne by the mortgagor, and the amount of the fee should not be subject to increase if the mortgage is carried out (a). The report must not merely state the value of the property, but must be of such a character that the loan can properly be said to have been made "under the advice of the surveyor or valuer as expressed in such report." The surveyor should therefore state what amount may in his opinion safely be advanced upon the security of the particular property (b), and expressly advise that such amount should be advanced.

[Amount of loan.]

32. If the trustee, by compliance with the provisions of the recent enactment, has brought himself within its protection, the only requirement as to the amount of the loan is that it must not exceed two-thirds of the value of the property as appearing by the report, and as the section applies to loans upon "any property of any tenure, whether agricultural or house or other property, on which the trustee can lawfully lend," there is now established one uniform rule as to the amount of money proportionate to the value of the property which the trustee may safely advance. Formerly a distinction was made, and it was considered that while trustees] could not be advised to advance more than two-thirds of the actual value of the estate if it were freehold land (c), if the property consist of freehold houses, they should not lend so much as two-thirds (d), but (say) one-half of the actual value (e). [It has often been said that the "two-thirds rule," as it is called, is not a hard and fast rule, but] only a general one (f); and where trustees have lent on the security of property of less value, but acted honestly, they have been protected by the Court, and allowed their costs (g). [But the rule has certainly been regarded as one which ought not lightly to be departed from (h), and as

Sufficiency of security.

33. It has been held that as to buildings used in trade,] and the value of which must depend on external and uncertain circumstances, trustees would not, in general, be justified in lending so much as one-half (a). [And where trustees having a power to invest on real securities invested on the security of freehold property used as brick-works to an amount which was excessive, having regard to the value of the property independently of its capability of being used for trade purposes, they were held responsible (b). So, too, it has been held that trustees should not lend on the security of unlet houses, especially if the mortgagor is a builder (c); and cottage property in a town, the value of which necessarily depends on changing circumstances (d), cannot be regarded as an eligible investment for trustees, though the mere fact that new buildings on the security of which trustees are lending are unfinished may not be material if due security is taken for their completion (e). In reference to decisions of this kind, it must be borne in mind that by the recent statute the duty which the trustee is empowered to delegate is that of ascertaining the value of the property, but the statute will not protect him from a breach of trust on the ground that the security "is one of a class which is attended with hazard" (f), and, generally, it is conceived that in reference to the sufficiency of the security he is bound to exercise the same care and prudence as theretofore. Where the question is simply one of value, which, in the ordinary course of business, it is within the functions of a surveyor or valuer to determine, the protection afforded by the statute seems to be complete. But further than this it does not appear to extend, and a trustee, while, of course, eschewing altogether all investments of a speculative character, will be well advised if he obtains in every case from his surveyor and valuer a report as full and ample as may be, setting forth all particulars requisite in order to enable the trustee to judge not merely as to the present, the special, or the temporary value of the property, but as to its permanent value for all purposes (a).

34. With reference to the liability of a trustee who makes an excessive advance upon a mortgage security, it is now enacted (b) that where a trustee shall have improperly advanced trust money on a mortgage security which would at the time of the investment have been a proper investment in all respects (c) for a less sum than was actually advanced thereon, the security shall be deemed an authorised investment for such less sum, and the trustee shall only be liable to make good the sum advanced in excess thereof with interest, and the section applies "to investments made as well before as after the passing of this Act, except where some action or other proceeding shall be pending with reference thereto at the passing of this Act." [Liability of trustee lending excessive sum.]

Where trust money has been invested on an insufficient security, and the trustee is ordered to replace the fund, but the existing securities are retained at the instance of the trustee to await a more favourable time for realising them, the cestuis que trust are entitled to a lien on the securities until the fund is replaced (d).

35. The duty of the trustee in considering the sufficiency of the title to the mortgaged property is not distinguishable in principle from his duty in the case of a purchase (e). Mortgages of leaseholds, however, formerly rested on a different footing from purchases by reason that the provisions of the Vendor and [Title.]

The following are suggested as some of the most material points to be attended to by the trustee: 1. The instructions to the valuer should be in writing. 2. It should appear how the trustees became acquainted with the property. 3. The valuer should be informed that the loan is one of trust-money; and (4) generally of all material circumstances known to the trustees or their adviser in reference to the property and neighbourhood. 5. The report should be in writing. 6. It should particularly describe the character of the property, and should not extend to any property other than that on which the loan is to be made (see Re Walker, 59 L. J. Ch. 386, 391; 62 L. T. N.S. 449; 38 W. R. 766). 7. All matters connected with the property tending to decrease its value in reference to repairs, outgoings, and the like, should be stated (S. C.). 8. The means of knowledge and capacity of the valuer should be clearly made to appear, especially his experience, if any, in the locality, and his information as to actual recent sales in the district. 9. The report should be expressed in plain business-like language, and not in inflated phraseology.]

Purchaser Act, 1874 (a), and the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (b), were not applicable to mortgages. This is remedied by the Trustee Act, 1888, which provides (c) that no trustee lending money upon the security of any leasehold property shall be chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that in making such loan he dispensed, either wholly or partially, with the production or investigation of the lessor's title. It was held by Lord Romilly, M.R., that, as trustees are bound to employ competent persons as their solicitors, if, through the ignorance or negligence of their solicitors, the trustees lend money upon a bad title, they are personally responsible to the cestuis que trust. But the decision was appealed against, and the case was compromised with the sanction of the Lords Justices on behalf of infants (d).

[Duty of solicitor to trustee.]

36. [The duty of a solicitor advising a trustee in reference to an investment of trust money is not so much himself to form or express an opinion on the value of the property offered as security, (though the law does not prohibit him from doing so if he thinks fit,) as to see that the trustee has before him the proper materials for forming a judgment of his own. He ought therefore to see not only that the trustee has before him proper valuations of the property, but that he is made acquainted with any facts known to the solicitor and not appearing by the valuations which may affect the value of the property, and that his attention is directed to any rules laid down by the courts for the guidance of trustees with reference to such matters (e).]

Ground rents.

37. A power of investment upon the security of freehold or copyhold hereditaments will authorise trustees to invest upon freehold ground rents reserved out of houses, and upon the question of value it will be borne in mind that the value of the houses is included, as, if the ground rents be not paid, the landlord can enter (f).

Trustees may not lend on mortgage to one of themselves.

38. Trustees are precluded from lending on mortgage to one of themselves, as all must exercise an impartial judgment as to the sufficiency of the security (g).

Existing mortgages.

39. Where trustees and executors are empowered by will to lay out money upon real securities, they are authorised in continuing it upon existing mortgages (a); but the trustees should first satisfy themselves as to the sufficiency of the security.

[Power "to continue to hold" investments.]

40. [Where trustees are authorised to "continue to hold" special investments, the power must, primâ facie, be held to apply to such of the trusts as are continuous, and the trustees may appropriate to a special continuous trust any of the investments which the settlor has authorised to be held (b).]

Fowler v. Reynal.

41. If trustees have a power of lending to three on a mortgage of their joint interest in a particular property, they cannot lend to two of them. Neither can the trustees lend to the three without taking any security at the time, though after an interval of two years they succeed in obtaining the security. It is no excuse to say that the delay in taking the security did not occasion the loss. The answer is, that the terms of the power were not complied with (c).

Road bonds.

42. Road bonds, or mortgages of tolls and toll-houses, are real securities, though they may not be eligible real securities (d); and where a testator, having road bonds, empowered his executor to leave any part of his assets on existing "real securities," it was held that they were not bound to call in the road bonds, but might exercise a discretion. The Court, however, gave no opinion whether the executor would have been justified in lending trust money on road bonds as an original investment (e).

Railway mortgages.

43. It has since been determined, that a power to lend on real securities does not authorise a loan upon railway mortgages (f), and à fortiori a power to invest "upon the security by way of mortgage of any freehold, copyhold, or leasehold hereditaments," does not authorise an investment on railway mortgages (g). And even a power to lend on "approved securities," though it will justify an investment on an ordinary mortgage, might not be held to extend to railway securities (h). And where trustees are empowered to lend "on such securities as they may approve," they are still bound to make inquiries, and exercise a sound discretion whether the securities are of sufficient value; and if in such a case the trustees lend on any irregular securities, the onus lies on the trustees to show the sufficiency of the security (a).

Loan upon a judgment.

44. Trustees, with power to lend on real securities, could not lend on personal security with a judgment entered up against the borrower, [even when] by 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, judgments were a charge on all the lands of the debtor, in the same manner as if he had, by writing under his hand, agreed to charge the same (b).

Upon leaseholds for lives.

45. Trustees having power to lend on mortgage, ought not to invest on security of leaseholds for lives, for there can be no security without resorting to a policy of insurance, and then, quatenus the policy, they rely upon the funds and credit of a private company (c). In the case of leaseholds, the lessee generally does not know the lessor's title; and where this is the case, it is an additional reason why trustees cannot accept the security. This restriction, however, does not apply to leases for lives in Ireland renewable for ever (d).

Upon leaseholds for years.

"Real securities."

46. Although where there is a power to lend on mortgage of real estates generally, there may be no objection on principle, to an investment on long terms of years at a peppercorn rent, which beneficially are equal to freeholds, yet it was held that technically long terms of years did not answer the description of real securities (e). [Now, however, by the Trustee Act, 1888 (f), it is provided that a power to invest trust money in real securities shall authorise and shall be deemed to have always authorised an investment upon mortgage of property held for an unexpired term of not less than two hundred years, and not subject to any reservation of rent greater than 1*s.* a year, or to any right of redemption, or to any condition for re-entry except for non-payment of rent.]

Mortgage for long term.

47. [Formerly, although] the mortgagor was seised in fee, a demise for a long term of years was often thought the more convenient form of mortgage, in order that the land and the money might devolve together upon the personal representative of the mortgagee, [but modern legislation has rendered such a device unnecessary, and it has consequently fallen into disuse.]

Leaseholds with onerous covenants.

48. As to leaseholds of short duration, and incumbered with covenants and clauses of forfeiture, although no rule can be laid down that a trustee would not be justified under any circumstances in lending on such a security, yet he would at least be treading on very delicate ground, and the onus would lie heavily upon him to make out the perfect propriety of the investment (a). If the trustees be authorised and required, at the instance of the tenant for life, to invest the trust fund in a purchase of leaseholds, they have no option if the tenant for life insist upon his right (b).

Copyholds.

49. There can be no objection to copyholds as a real security, but the trustees should of course take care that they are of adequate value, and not rely on the mere covenant to surrender, but procure an actual surrender (c).

Mortgage of an undivided share or of a reversion.

50. There does not appear to be any absolute objection to a loan by trustees on the security of an undivided share or of a reversion; but they must not advance more than the proper proportion of the value of the undivided share, or of the reversion as such, that is, the present value of the future interest, and in taking securities of this kind a full power of sale (d) would be an essential provision.

Lending on real security in Ireland.

51. Where trustees were expressly authorised to lend on real securities in England, Wales, or Great Britain, they were empowered by 4 & 5 Will. 4. c. 29, to lend on real securities in Ireland. But the second section enacted, that all loans in which any minor, unborn child, or person of unsound mind was interested, should be made by the direction of the Court of Chancery, to be obtained in any cause, or (a) upon petition in a summary way (b). And by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 32 (c), trustees, executors, and administrators, where not expressly forbidden by the instrument creating the trust, might invest the trust-fund in real securities in any part of the United Kingdom, and investments on real securities in Ireland might therefore be made; [but these enactments have now been repealed (but without prejudice to the validity of any act done thereunder) by the Trust Investment Act, 1889, already adverted to (d).]

[(d) The law now supplies a power of sale, see 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 19. It must, however, be borne in mind that an investment on an undivided share involves a complication with the rights of other persons, and, in the case of small estates, the possibility that the costs of a partition action may exceed the margin of the security; while in the case of a reversion there is no income available for payment of the interest, and the value of the mortgaged property is in many cases matter of speculation rather than of reasonable certainty.]

Lord St. Leonards' Act.

Securities in Scotland.

52. Where trustees have a power of investing upon "real securities," it is conceived that real securities in Scotland, where the law is wholly different, would not fall within the description; and though the above-mentioned Act of 22 and 23 Vict. c. 35, allowed investments in real securities in any part of the United Kingdom, yet as by the 33rd section the Act was not to extend to Scotland, it was not considered safe for trustees to invest in Scotch securities, [and under the Trustee Investment Act, 1889, by which 22 & 23 Vict. c. 53 has been replaced, and which also does not extend to Scotland, it would seem that such investments are no more advisable than they previously were.]

Land Improvement Act.

53. By the Improvement of Land Act, 1864 (e), trustees having a power to lend on real securities shall (unless the settlement provide the contrary) have power, at their discretion, to invest their trust-money on charges under the Act or mortgages thereof. But as the provisions are apparently prospective, trustees under a settlement dated before 29 July, 1864, when the statute passed, cannot safely assume that the Act applies to their case.

Second mortgages.

54. Trustees cannot be advised to make advances upon a second mortgage, for they neither get the legal estate nor the title deeds, and they may be placed under serious difficulties by the acts of the first mortgagee. If he bring an action for foreclosure, the trustees forfeit their interest unless they redeem, which they may have no means of doing out of their own estate, and they may experience a difficulty in procuring a person to take a transfer; and if the first mortgage contain a power of sale, the mortgagee may sell the property at a great disadvantage, and the trustees cannot prevent it, unless by redemption, which may not be practicable (a). In addition to which it is extremely difficult to guard satisfactorily against the possible event of the mortgagor obtaining an advance upon a third mortgage without disclosing the second, and should this occur the third mortgagee might as a purchaser for value without notice get in the first mortgage, and tack his original mortgage to it, and squeeze out the second mortgage; or the first mortgagee or his transferee might by consolidation of his mortgage with a mortgage of other property of the same mortgagor, oust the trustees of their security (b). [But by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), sect. 17, in cases of mortgages made, or one of which is made, after the 31st December, 1881, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary, the right of consolidating separate mortgages of different properties is taken away.]

But a charge under the Improvement of Land Act, 1864, is declared by that Act not to be deemed such an incumbrance as to preclude trustees of money, with power to invest the same in the purchase of land or on mortgage, from investing it upon land so charged, unless the terms of the trust or power expressly provide that the security to be so taken shall not be subject to any prior charge (d).

Equitable mortgages.

55. An investment upon a deposit of title deeds has this advantage over a second mortgage, that it would be difficult for the mortgagor to deal with the property in the absence of the deeds. At the same time it is possible that by some accident or fraud, the legal estate might get into the hands of a purchaser for value without notice, and if so the trustees would be ousted. Sir J. Romilly, M.R., observed, "I do not know that it has ever been determined, and I do not mean to express an opinion, that a trustee is ever justified in lending money on real security,

(a) See Norris v. Wright, 14 Beav. 308; Robinson v. Robinson, 16 Jur. 256; Drosier v. Brereton, 15 Beav. 226; Waring v. Waring, 3 Ir. Ch. Rep. 337; Lockhart v. Reilly, 1 De G. & J. 464, 476.

(b) But a third mortgagee holding a security which had no existence at the date of the second mortgage, and taking with notice of that mortgage, cannot consolidate a first mortgage with his own third mortgage as against the second mortgagee, Baker v. Gray, 1 Ch. D. 491; [and see Jennings v. Jordan, 6 App. Cas. 698; Harter v. Colman, 19 Ch. D. 630.]

when he does not get the legal estate" (a). [And in a recent case the late M. R. said that "it had never been decided that an investment upon equitable mortgage was unauthorised when there was a power to invest on real securities, because it had always been assumed to be the law of the Court without calling for a decision," and he acted upon that view (b). There seems to be no objection to trustees investing upon a submortgage where they get the legal estate, and are put in a position to exercise the powers arising under the original mortgage deed (c).]

Contributory mortgage.

56. [It is a breach of trust for trustees empowered to invest "in their names" upon real security, to invest upon a contributory mortgage of freeholds (d), and in general it is apprehended that] trustees should not join with others in a mortgage, so as to mix up the trust fund with the rights of strangers. Still less could they take a joint mortgage in the name of a common trustee, for this would also be a delegation of their duty.

Mixing trust-money in a mortgage.

Powers of sale.

57. Mortgagees at the present time almost invariably have powers of sale, [either expressed in the mortgage or arising under the recent Act (e),] but formerly it was otherwise, and trustees would no doubt be held justified in taking a transfer of an old mortgage not accompanied with a power of sale. Where, however, it is practicable, trustees should always insist on a power of sale, though the omission might not amount to a breach of trust (f).

Caution in payment of the money.

58. When trustees lend on mortgage, they should be careful not to part with the money, except on delivery of the security; for they will be liable for all the consequences if they sell out stock, and allow their solicitor or agent to receive the money on his representation that the mortgage is ready, and it afterwards turns out that the proposed security was a pure invention, and that the money has been misapplied (g).

Clause not to call in the money.

59. A power of investment does not justify trustees in admitting a clause that the mortgage shall not be called in for a certain period, and if the interests of the cestuis que trust were thereby affected, the trustees would be personally responsible (a).

In loans of trust-money, the trust kept out of sight.

60. Where trust-money is lent upon mortgage, it is desirable to keep the trust out of sight, in order that when the money is paid off, the trust deed may not become an essential link in the mortgagor's title. It is usual, therefore, to insert in the mortgage deed a declaration, that the money advanced belongs to the trustees (not described in that character, but by name) on a joint account, and that the receipt of the survivors or survivor, his executors or administrators, their or his assigns, shall be a sufficient discharge (b); a practice which, assuming the trust settlement to confer the power of executing the trusts and giving receipts on the survivors or survivor, his executors or administrators, their or his assigns, does not seem open to much objection, and has received the sanction of general usage. Any declaration of trust of the mortgage that may be requisite is executed by a separate deed. The trustees should, however, also execute the mortgage deed, as doubts have been entertained (though it is conceived without reason (c)) whether, if they omit to execute, the declaration will bind them. By this method, should the mortgage be called in or transferred before any change of trustees occurs, no inconvenience arises (d). Upon a change of trustees, however, the difficulty of framing a transfer of the mortgage to the new trustees so as not to disclose the trust is very great. Some conveyancers, indeed, treat the difficulty as insurmountable, and disclose the trust; others recite in the transfer an actual payment of the mortgage money by the new trustees to the old, a practice open to the objection that it involves a recital absolutely contrary to fact (e). Another and middle course fre-

[(b) See now 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 61, which, subject to a contrary intention being expressed in the instrument, makes the receipt of the survivors or survivor, or of the personal representatives of the last survivor, a complete discharge in all cases where, in a mortgage or transfer made since the 31st December, 1881, the money advanced or owing is expressed to be advanced by or owing to more persons than one out of money or as money belonging to them on a joint account, or the mortgage or transfer is made to more persons than one jointly and not in shares.]

(c) How can a person claim at the same time under and against a deed? If he claim under the mortgage at all, he must admit the declaration that the money was a joint advance. Besides, the presumption (unless and until the contrary is proved) would be, that the solicitor who prepared the deed had sufficient authority to insert the clause.

(e) In a note to Jarman's Bythewood, vol. 6, p. 381, it is stated that "some gentlemen introduce a declaration that the mortgagees are trustees, and have no beneficial interest, conquently adopted, is as follows: A. and B. being appointed new trustees in the room of C. and D., the recitals omit to notice the appointment of A. and B. as new trustees, and merely state that A. and B. "have become entitled to the mortgage, and have required C. and D. to convey and assign to them." But this last method is by no means free from difficulty. The degree of inaccuracy of statement is perhaps no greater than that involved in the original joint account clause; but the absence of consideration creates embarrassment, and there seems room for contention by a future purchaser of the mortgaged estate that he has a right to know how A. and B. became entitled. Another mode is to recite that C. and D. are possessed of the mortgage moneys and security in trust for A. and B. to whom the same belong on a joint account, and who are desirous of having the same vested in them; a method affording a greater prospect of success than those previously mentioned, and on the whole perhaps to be preferred. [This mode of effecting the transfer has recently been approved, and the Court expressed an opinion that purchasers were entitled to rely on such a recital as a protection against any trusts which might affect the property (a).]

Mortgage where the trust is disclosed.

61. Where trust-money is secured upon a mortgage and the trust appears upon the title, the mortgagor generally requires a [statutory acknowledgment of the right to] production of the settlement for the purpose of satisfying a future purchaser that the estate has been discharged, and it is conceived that the trustee should give such [an acknowledgment.

[Friendly society.]

62. If the trustees of a friendly society lend the funds of the society on personal security not authorised by the Friendly Societies Act, 1875, the transaction is not an illegal contract upon which the trustees cannot sue, but amounts only to a breach of trust on the part of the trustees (b).]

Scale must be held evenly by trustees.

63. Where successive estates are limited, the scale in investments should of course be held evenly as between all parties, and the tenant for life should not be allowed, by an investment on a security less safe or less permanent than the usual one, and ceiving, and, it is apprehended, rightly, that this affirmation, which refers to no specific trust, would not render it incumbent on any person paying the mortgage to inquire into the nature of the trust." This proposition, it is conceived, cannot safely be acted upon. therefore yielding to the present holder an increased rate of interest, to advance himself at the expense of the remainderman (a).

Long Annuities, &c.

64. If a testator's estate consist of Long Annuities, or other fund either not a Government security or not of the most permanent character, the Court, as we have seen, as soon as its observation is attracted to the circumstance, has been accustomed to direct a conversion of such estate into Consols (b); and even Four per cent. and Five per cent. Bank Annuities, while that description of stock existed, were ordered to be similarly converted (c). It follows that trustees, who must be guided by the practice of the Court, would not be justified, in the absence of a special power, in investing trust moneys settled upon several persons successively upon any securities, which, by the rule of the Court referred to, would be liable to be converted into other securities. Even where the trustees were empowered by the will to continue any of the testator's Government Stocks, it was held that they were not justified in continuing Long Annuities (d).

Navy 5 per cents.

65. However, where the trustees were directed by the will to invest on "Government or other good security," and part of the testator's estate consisted of Navy Five per cents., and the tenant for life continued to receive the dividends for more than thirty years, the Court refused to hold the trustees liable, for not having converted the Navy Five per cents. into Three per cent. Consols (e).

Selling out Consols.

66. Where the fund is already invested in Consols, it would be a clear breach of trust to sell out and invest the proceeds in an irregular fund, as, for instance, in Long Annuities (f).

Where trust funds are irregularly invested, the tenant for life and the trustees may be called upon to answer the difference.

67. Where a tenant for life has been wrongly in possession of the dividends of a stock producing an extraordinary income, he will be accountable to the remainderman for the excess of his receipts beyond the income which he would have received had the fund been properly invested (g). Upon the question whether, if the tenant for life be insolvent, the trustees should be decreed to make compensation to the suffering party, Lord Eldon said, he would not state what the Court would do in such a case, for it depended on many circumstances (a). In the case of Dimes v. Scott (b), where the executors were expressly directed to convert the testator's personal estate into money, and invest the proceeds in Government or real securities in trust for A. for life, remainder to B., and the executors for eleven years permitted A. to receive 10 per cent. interest upon an Indian loan, it was held they were chargeable with the difference between 10 per cent. interest which they had wrongfully paid, and the interest that would have resulted from a conversion into Three per cent. Consols at the expiration of one year from the testator's decease. And in other later cases the Court, under similar circumstances, has apparently viewed the trustees as liable, and the tenant for life as liable over to the trustees, to the extent of his benefit (c).

Of conversion of assets in India.

68. Where a testator dies in India, and neither the fund nor the parties entitled to it are under the jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery, it is not the duty of the executor in India to transmit the assets to England to be invested in Consols, but he may invest the property in the securities of the government of India, and the tenant for life will be entitled to the dividends or interest, whatever the amount. If the parties return to England, and so come under the jurisdiction of the Court, the fund may then be brought over at the instance of the remainderman, and the tenant for life must submit to the consequential reduction of his income (d).

Trust to invest in the funds and the money is retained.

69. If trustees be expressly bound by the terms of their trust to invest in the public funds, and instead of so doing they retain the money in their hands, the cestuis que trust may clearly elect to charge them with the amount of the money or with the amount of the stock which they might have purchased with the money (e).

And it was said, that if a trust were of a permanent character, in which case the Court expected trustees to invest in Consols, though the settlement contained no express direction to that effect, trustees who improperly retained the funds in their hands might perhaps be held liable, at the option of the cestuis que trust, for the principal sum or the amount of stock which it would have purchased; Robinson v. Robinson, 1 De G. M. & G. 256, per Cur. [But since the Trust Investment Act, 1889, cases of the kind last-mentioned cannot occur, as trustees, in the absence of express directions in the trust instrument, have discretionary powers of investment.]

Trustees ordered to invest in stock or on real securities and neglecting to do either.

70. If trustees or executors be directed by the will to convert the testator's property and invest it in Government or real securities, it was long a question whether they should be answerable for the principal money with interest, or the amount of stock which might have been purchased at the period when the conversion should have been made with subsequent dividends, at the option of the cestuis que trust (a); or whether they should be charged with the amount of principal and interest only, without an option to the cestuis que trust of taking the stock and dividends (b). It has now been decided that the trustee is answerable only for the principal money and interest, and that the cestuis que trust have no option of taking the stock and dividends. The principle upon which the Court proceeds is, that the trustee is liable only for not having done what it was his duty to have done, and the measure of his responsibility is that which the cestuis que trust must have been entitled to in whatever mode that duty was performed; that the trustee might have discharged his duty without purchasing Three per cent. Bank Annuities; that the trustee is not to be deemed retrospectively to have exercised the discretion one way or the other, but is answerable only for the consequences of not having exercised the discretion; that to compel the trustee to purchase a sum of stock because the price has since risen, is to regulate the liability by an accidental subsequent occurrence, and not by the superiority of the stock over a mortgage at the time when the investment ought to have been made (c).

Trustees selling out stock improperly.

71. If the trust fund be standing on a proper security, and the trustee calls it in for no purpose connected with the trust, and therefore in dereliction of his duty, or for a purpose not authorised by the terms of the trust, he will be compellable, at the option of the cestuis que trust, either to replace the specific stock, or the stock into which, if not sold out, it would have been converted by Act of Parliament (d), with the intermediate

Div. 351, 368), that (except in the particular and exceptional case provided for by section 5 of the Trustee Act, 1888), this liability equally attaches whether the improper purpose be an unauthorised investment or an improvident one. In dividends (a), or to account for the proceeds of the sale (b) with interest at 5 per cent. (c). And the breach of trust will not be cured by a subsequent reinvestment upon the trusts unless the reinvestment be the same in specie (d). But in a case where the trustee did not seek to make anything himself, but was honourably unfortunate in having yielded to the importunity of one of the cestuis que trust, it was held by Sir A. Hart, that, although the trustee was bound to replace the specific stock, the cestuis que trust should not have the option of taking the proceeds with interest (e). If the trustee become bankrupt, the cestuis que trust may at their option prove for the proceeds with interest, or for the price of the specific stock at the date of the bankruptcy with interim dividends (f). [And where the trustee has retired from the trust and transferred the security to new trustees, they are entitled to realise the security and hold the former trustee liable for the deficiency, without giving him the option of replacing the money and taking the security (g).]

Neglect to invest property.

72. If trustees be under an obligation to invest in the funds, and they pay the money into a bank with a direction to lay it out in Bank Annuities, and the bankers neglect to do it, and the trustees make no inquiry for five months, and the bankers fail, the trustees are answerable for the money or the stock at the option of the cestuis que trust (h).

[Postponement of investment.]

73. [Where trustees are expressly directed to make a particular investment, which when the time for investment arrives has become a perilous one, they may, in the exercise of their discretion as prudent men, postpone the investment, but where such postponement is against the letter of the trust they should apply to the Court for its sanction to the proposed course (i)].

either case the trustee has taken money belonging to the trust, and has improperly invested the money so taken, and it is difficult to see any sound reason for drawing a distinction between the position of the cestuis que trust in the one case and in the other.]

Trustees may not invest so as to subject the fund to the control of any one trustee.

74. Trustees would not be justified in making any investment that would subject the trust money to the power or control of any one of the trustees singly; they could not, for instance, lay out the fund upon Indian bills (supposing such a security to be warranted by the settlement), if made payable, not to all the trustees in their joint capacity, but to one of the trustees individually (a).

Solicitors.

75. Solicitors employed in negociating a loan of trust monies, may not be liable for a breach of trust if they have no other privity with the transaction than what arises from their professional duty, but they will be deemed trustees and be responsible as such if they act professionally in carrying out a transaction which they know to be a breach of trust, and which is calculated to promote their own private ends (b).

Trustees lending should not employ the same solicitor as the borrower.

76. In laying out trust monies, trustees would do well not to employ the solicitor who acts for the borrower. Besides the inconveniences that arise from the doctrine of implied notice, there is in this case such a conflict of duties on the part of the solicitor, that he cannot adequately represent the interests of both lender and borrower (c).

[Directors not trustees.]

77. [Directors of trading companies are not trustees in the sense in which that term is used with reference to settlements and wills (d). They are confidential agents having a large discretion (e), and may properly make advances on securities of a more speculative character than could be accepted by trustees (f).

[Liquidator.]

And a liquidator is an agent of the company, and not strictly speaking a trustee either for creditors or contributories (g).]

SECTION V.

LIABILITY OF TRUSTEES TO PAYMENT OF INTEREST.

General laches.

1. It may be stated as a general rule, that if a trustee be guilty of any unreasonable delay in investing the fund or transferring it to the hand destined to receive it, he will be answerable to the cestui que trust for interest during the period of his laches; and a trustee has been decreed to pay interest even where it was not prayed by the bill (a); and in a suit establishing laches, will be decreed to pay personally the costs up to the hearing of a suit arising out of the laches (b).

Executor must pay testator's debts as soon as he has assets.

2. An executor or administrator should discharge the testator's liabilities as soon as he has collected assets sufficient for the purpose, and therefore if he keep money in his hands idle, when there is an outstanding debt upon which interest is running, he will himself be charged with interest on a sum equal in amount to the debt, and if the outstanding debt carry interest at 5 per cent. the executor will be charged with interest at the same rate (c).

After payment of debts and legacies executor must account for surplus.

3. After payment of debts and legacies, if the executor or administrator be guilty of laches in accounting for the surplus estate to the residuary legatee (d) or next of kin (e), he will be charged by the Court with interest for the balance improperly retained.

Trustee in bankruptcy must not neglect to pay dividends.

4. So, if the trustee of a bankrupt's estate neglect to pay a dividend to the creditors (f), or the receiver of an estate do not move the Court in proper time to have the rents in his hands made productive (a), they will be ordered to account for the money with interest from the time when the breach of duty commenced.

No excuse that the trustee or executor did not use the money.

5. And an executor or other fiduciary cannot excuse himself by saying that he made no actual use of the money, but lodged it at his banker's (b), and to a separate account (c), for it was a breach of trust to retain the money.

Delay may be explained by the mistake of the trustee or executor.

6. But, where an executor conceived himself to be entitled to the residue, and the Court considered his claim to be just in itself, but was obliged from a particular circumstance in the case to give judgment against him, it was thought too severe to put him in the situation of one who had neglected his duty, and the demand against him for interest was consequently disallowed (d).

Formerly the executor might have used the assets.

7. Formerly it was held that an executor might employ the assets in his trade, or lend them upon security, and he should not be called upon to account for the profits or interest (e). And such was the case even where money which had been lent by the testator on good security was called in by the executor for the express purpose of being re-lent by himself. For the executor, it was argued, was not bound to lend the assets, and if he did so, it was at his peril, and he was answerable for losses, and if accountable for any loss, he was surely entitled to any gains (f). But Lord North overruled the doctrine in spite of the alleged practice of the Court for the last twenty years, and the authority of above forty precedents; and as to the argument, that, if the money should be lost, the executor would be personally responsible, his Lordship said, it was very well known that a man might insure his money at the rate of one per cent. (g).

At least where he was solvent.

8. A distinction was afterwards taken between a solvent and an insolvent executor; that the former, as he might suffer a loss, should take the gain, but, as an executor who was insolvent at the time of the loan could incur no risk of a loss personally, he should not be allowed to take to himself any benefit (h).

And where the assets used were not specifically bequeathed.

9. And Lord Hardwicke drew another distinction; that if an executor had placed out assets that were specifically bequeathed, he would be made to account for the interest, but that the Court never directed interest against an executor who made use in the way of his trade of general assets come to his hands (a).

Rule now general that executor must account for all profits.

10. But all these refinements have long since been swept away (b); and the rule is now universal, that, whether the executor be solvent or insolvent, whether the money be part of the general assets or specifically bequeathed, whether it be lent upon security or employed in the way of trade, the executor shall account for the utmost actual profits to the testator's estate (c).

Trustee using trust money in trade must account for it with 5 per cent. interest, or the actual profits.

11. Where the money has been employed by breach of trust in trade, the cestui que trust has the option of taking the actual profits or of charging the executor with interest (d). And executors cannot disguise the employment of the money in their business under the garb of a loan to one of themselves (e). And an executor who is a trader is considered to employ the money in trade, if he lodge it at his banker's and place it in his own name, for a merchant must generally keep a balance at his banker's, and this answers the purpose of his credit as much as if the money were his own (f).

Executor charged with 4 per cent. interest only unless he made more.

12. The rate of interest with which an executor is usually charged is 4 per cent. (g); but the rule holds only where it does

It has been contended that the rate of interest, having regard to the value of money, ought now to be reduced from 4 per cent. to 3, and from 5 per cent to 4. In In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers Association, Wainwright's case (62 L. T. N. S. 30, 33), Kay, J., allowed 4 per cent. in lieu of the usual mercantile rate of 5 per cent., but this was done on the submission of the applicant, and Kekewich, J., has re-not appear that the executor has made greater interest, for the Court invariably compels the executor to account for every farthing he has actually received (a).

Under what circumstances trustees will be charged with extra interest.

13. It is not easy to define the circumstances under which the Court will charge executors and trustees with more than 4 per cent. interest, or with compound interest. In a late case, it was laid down by Sir John Romilly, M.R.: 1. That if an executor retain balances in his hands, which he ought to have invested, the Court will charge him with simple interest, at 4 per cent. 2. That if, in addition to such retention, he has committed a direct breach of trust, or if the fund has been taken by him from a proper state of investment, in which it was producing 5 per cent., he will be charged with interest after the rate of 5 per cent. per annum. 3. That if in addition to this, he has employed the money so obtained by him in trade or speculation, for his own benefit or advantage, he will be charged either with the profits actually obtained from the use of the money, or with interest at 5 per cent. per annum, and also with yearly rests, that is, with compound interest (b).

Trustee charged with 5 per cent. where gross misconduct.

14. The dicta and decisions undoubtedly seem to establish, in accordance with the view just quoted, that an executor will be charged with interest at 5 per cent. where he is guilty, not merely of negligence, but of actual corruption or misfeasance, amounting to a wilful breach of trust (c). But in Attorney-General v. Alford (d), Lord Cranworth expressed his disapprobation of charging the executor with a higher rate of interest by way of penalty; and laid it down that an executor was chargeable only with the interest which he had received, or which he ought to have received, or which it was so fairly to be presumed cently (see London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co. v. South Eastern Railway Co., W. N. 1891, p. 70) expressed the opinion that such a change, though desirable, can only be effected by some consensus of judicial opinion or by higher authority.] that he had received that he was estopped from saying that he did not receive it. And it was subsequently observed by V. C. Wood that there were three cases where the Court charged more than 4 per cent. upon balances in the hands of a trustee:—1. Where he ought to have received more, as by improperly calling in a mortgage carrying 5 per cent.; 2. Where he had actually received more than 4 per cent.; and 3. Where he must be presumed to have received more, as if he had traded with the money (a). But in a subsequent case, Lord Cranworth offered some explanatory remarks (b) upon the notions imputed to him; L. J. James, however, in a recent case (c) approved of the doctrine thought to have been laid down by Lord Cranworth, viz. that the Court had no jurisdiction to punish an executor for misconduct by making him account for more than he actually received, or which it presumed he did receive, or ought to have received, and that the Court was not a Court of penal jurisdiction.

Money used in trade.

15. Where money has been employed in trade, the rate of interest has been almost invariably 5 per cent. (d), the Court presuming every business to yield a profit to that amount. But Lord Thurlow, in one case, offered an inquiry whether, under the circumstances, such a rate of interest might not be too high (e); and in another, where an executor could plead extenuating circumstances 4 per cent. only was charged (f).

Whether simple or compound interest chargeable where moneys used by executor or trustee in trade.

16. Whether, where the money has been employed in trade, simple or compound interest shall, as a general rule, be charged, is a point upon which the decisions are in conflict, the older authorities pointing to simple interest as the proper measure of liability, and the more recent to compound interest. reported case in which a trustee who had used trust money in trade appears to have been charged compound interest is that of Walker v. Woodward (a). The late Vice-Chancellor of England refused to charge a trustee of a charity estate, who had used the trust monies in carrying on his trade, with compound interest (b); but Sir John Leach charged an executor with compound interest under similar circumstances (c), and in other later decisions Sir John Romilly, M.R., in accordance with the rule laid down by him (as before stated), directed an account with rests (d). But in a later case still, the Court of Appeal refused to direct compound interest (e). [In a still later case where an administratrix had allowed her solicitor to receive and retain the dividends on securities, which had been set apart for an infant next-of-kin, she was decreed to account for the dividends with interest at 3 per cent. with half-yearly rests, on the ground that the administratrix ought to have had the dividends invested from time to time in consols, and the proceeds would have formed a common fund with the existing securities, and the dividends would thus have been invested at compound interest (f).]

Trustee neglecting a direction to accumulate, will be charged with compound interest.

17. If a testator expressly directs an accumulation to be made, and the executor having the money in his hands disregards the injunction it seems compound interest will be decreed (g). "Where there is an express trust," said Lord Eldon, "to make improvement of the money, if he will not honestly endeavour to improve it, there is nothing wrong in considering him, as to the principal, to have lent the money to himself, upon the same terms upon which he could have lent it to others, and as often as he ought to have lent it if it be principal, and as often as he ought to have received it, and lent it to others, if the demand be interest, and interest upon interest" (h). [If the accumulation be directed only during the minority of the cestui que trust with a direction to hand the fund over to him on his attaining 21, and the trustee after the determination of the minority, in lieu of paying over the trust funds, retains them uninvested or improperly invested, the trustee will be charged with compound interest (a).]

Executor not charged with interest during first year from testator's death.

18. An executor will not in general be charged with interest but from the end of a year from the time of the testator's decease. "It frequently," said Lord Thurlow, "may be necessary for an executor to keep large sums in his hands, especially in the course of the first year after the decease of the testator, in which case such necessity is so fully acknowledged, that, according to the constant course of the Court, the fund until that time is not considered distributable. After that, if the Court observes that an executor keeps money in his hands without any apparent reason, but merely for the purpose of using it, then it becomes negligence and a breach of trust, the consequence of which is that the Court will charge the executor with interest" (b).

No interest on money lost that never came to hand.

19. It will be observed that, in the preceding cases, trustees and executors have been decreed to pay interest in respect only of monies actually come to hand, and improperly retained; for when a fund has never been received, but has been inexcusably left outstanding and lost, it seems the Court contents itself with holding the trustees liable for the principal, without enforcing against them the equity, that as the fund, if got in, would have become productive, the trustees ought further to be charged with interest (c).

Mistake.

20. Where an executor, under a mistaken impression of the law, but acting bonâ fide, retained one third of the residue himself, and paid two-thirds to his co-executors, he was held accountable to the person entitled for the whole, but with interest only upon the one-third retained by himself (d). [But this case has been questioned on the ground that the executor ought to have been dealt with as if he had improperly retained the money in his own hands, on the principle that where a trustee has made an improper payment he is still regarded in equity as having the money in his own hands, and that accordingly he should have been held accountable for interest on the whole fund (e).]

SECTION VI.

OF THE DISTRIBUTION OF THE TRUST FUND.

Mistake as to rights is at the expense of the trustee.

1. It is incumbent upon the trustee to satisfy himself beyond doubt, before he parts with the possession of the property, who are the parties legally and equitably entitled to it. He must therefore attend to all claims of which he has notice; and he may compel all persons who claim to be cestuis que trust to set forth their title (a).

Quasi trustees.

2. The necessity of seeing that the trust-money reaches the proper hand is obligatory, not only on trustees regularly invested with the character, but on all persons having notice of the equities, as if A. lend a sum to B., and B. afterwards discovers that it is trust money, he cannot pay it back to A. unless A., as trustee, had a power of signing a receipt for it (b).

Derivative equities.

3. As to persons claiming directly under the instrument creating the trust, or their real or personal representatives, the trustee has express notice of the rights of parties, and must regulate his conduct accordingly. But other interests may grow out of and be grafted upon the original trust, as by appointment under a power or by assignment, and these the trustee cannot know except by express or implied notice subsequent to the creation of the trust. Thus, a fund is settled upon trust for A. for life, with remainder to such one or more of his children as A. shall appoint, and in default of appointment for his children equally. Here A. may exercise the power by appointing to some one child exclusively, or a child may assign his share to a stranger. In such cases the trustee must use his best endeavours to ascertain who are the persons equitably entitled, as he is always in danger of being affected by constructive notice. But if a trustee has no express notice and cannot be affected by constructive notice, and he pays at the proper time to the person primâ facie entitled under the original instrument, he cannot afterwards be made to account over again to the person claiming under the derivative title (c), and therefore a trustee under such circumstances is not justified in paying the fund into Court under the Trustee Relief Act (a).

[Improvident cestui que trust.]

[4. If the cestui que trust is sui juris and absolutely entitled to the trust fund, the trustees are not justified in withholding payment on the ground that the beneficiary intends to deal improvidently with the fund, and if they do so they will be liable for the costs of an action to enforce payment (b).]

Assignment.

5. After notice of an assignment the trustee cannot safely pay either principal or interest to the assignor (c) though the assignment be by way of mortgage only, for though a mortgagor in possession of real estate is not accountable for the rents until notice of the mortgagee's intention to enter, it cannot be assumed that the like rule will apply to personal estate in the hands of a trustee, as to which it has been said that the act of giving notice to the trustee is equivalent to taking possession (d). [And it has been held that where a first mortgagee of a leasehold house had notice of a second charge, and the property was subsequently sold by the mortgagor and the first mortgagee concurred in the sale, and allowed the balance of the purchase-money after satisfying his mortgage to be paid to the mortgagor, he was liable to the second mortgagee (e).]

Impeachable deeds.

6. An assignment is sometimes, though not void per se, yet of an impeachable character, as where there is a suspicion of the undue exercise of parental influence. In these cases it is conceived that while the deed remains unimpeached, the trustee may safely act on the assumption of its validity (f).

Assignment with receipt clause.

7. If the assignment confer on the assignee a power of signing receipts, the production of the deed with a receipt entitles the assignee to call for payment without tendering a release (g).

Death of cestui que trust.

8. If the cestui que trust be dead the trustee must pay to his personal representative, and if he mix himself up with questions arising out of the cestui que trust's will, and so refuse to pay to the personal representative, he will be saddled with the costs of a suit for recovery of the fund (h).

9. If the cestui que trust be a feme formerly married, but whose marriage has been dissolved (a), or there has been a judicial separation (b), [or a protection order (c),] the chose en action, though it accrued in right before the dissolution of marriage or the separation, [or protection order] is payable to the wife just as if the husband had previously died. In every case of judicial separation the wife, from the date of the decree and whilst the separation continues, is to be considered as a feme sole with respect to property "which she may acquire or which may come to or devolve upon her," and such property may be disposed of by her as a feme sole (d), but this enactment does not apply to property to which the wife was entitled in possession at the date of the decree, so that a restraint on anticipation by her affecting any such property will continue notwithstanding the separation (e); and where a protection order is made in case of desertion, the like consequences follow as from the date of the desertion (f). In both of these cases property of or to which the wife is possessed or entitled in remainder or reversion at the date of the desertion or decree (as the case may be) is to be included in the protection given by the order or decree (g); but in the case of a protection order on the ground of assault the order is to have the same effect in all respects as a decree for separation on the ground of cruelty, and the protection will only commence as at the date of the order. On the resumption of cohabitation, which puts an end to all the effects of a separation (h), the property belongs to the feme for her separate estate (i). And property acquired by a feme after a decree for judicial separation and while the decree continues in force, is not bound by a covenant to settle after acquired property to accrue during the coverture (j.)] ground of his misconduct (a), but where a life interest was given to the testator's son, with remainder to any wife of the son for her life, and he married a woman who was divorced from him on his petition, and died without marrying again, the woman was held not entitled to a life interest (b).

Right of surviving trustee to have another trustee appointed.

10. If a surviving trustee be placed in an embarrassing situation as regards the distribution or management of the fund, it is said that he has a right to ask for the appointment of a new trustee to assist him by his counsel (c).

Advice of counsel.

11. If through any misapprehension on the part of the trustee, or the ill advice of his counsel, the trust money finds its way into a channel not authorised by the terms of the trust, the trustee will be held personally responsible for the misapplication to the parties who can establish a better claim. "I have no doubt," said Lord Redesdale, upon one occasion, "the executors meant to act fairly and honestly, but they were misadvised; and the Court must proceed, not upon the improper advice under which an executor may have acted, but upon the acts he has done. If under the best advice he could procure he acts wrongly, it is his misfortune; but public policy requires that he should be the person to suffer" (d).

In one case where a testator had executed a promissory note in Switzerland for 600*l.*, but by a counter-note executed shortly after it was declared that 400*l.* only was due upon valuable consideration, but a Swiss Court, upon proceedings taken there, had awarded the payment of the whole 600*l.*, and the executor in England (though by our law but 400*l.* was demandable) had discharged the whole amount, Lord Alvanley observed, "If the executor had taken advice, and been advised by any gentleman of the law in this country that he was bound to make this payment, I would not have held him liable, for I will not permit a testestor to lay a trap for his executor, by doing a foolish act which may mislead him" (e). M. & G. 608, the fact that the trustees had acted upon the advice of counsel, though stated at the bar, was not in evidence, which may account for the silence of the L. JJ. upon this point in their judgments.

to the special circumstances of the case, and must not be taken as impugning the general rule.

Foreign law.

12. Every executor is taken to know the law of his country, but otherwise as to foreign laws. Thus, where a legacy was given to a married woman domiciled in Scotland, and before payment of the legacy the husband died, and the executors of the testator paid the legacy to the wife, and the executors of the husband afterwards sued the executors of the testator for the same legacy on the ground that, by the law of Scotland where the wife was domiciled, the chose en action did not survive as by the law of England to the wife, but passed to the representatives of the husband, it was held that the executors were not bound to know the law of Scotland, and that as they had acted according to the primâ facie line of their duty and the ordinary practice, and express notice to them of the law of Scotland had not been proved, they were not answerable (a).

Foreign domicile.

13. As personal property is regulated by the law of the domicile, the trustee, if a cestui que trust be domiciled abroad, should be careful how he deals with the interest of that cestui que trust. By the law of some countries a male does not attain majority till twenty-two, but a female at seventeen (b); and in other countries, as in Scotland, infants above the age of puberty (fourteen in males, and twelve in females) can with their curators give valid receipts for debts and legacies (c). In some countries the wife has an equity to a settlement, and in others (as in Denmark) she has not (d). [In the State of New York, the wife is entitled to a legacy or distributive share, as if she were sole (e).] In Australia, the Court pays the money of a married woman to the husband, without examination of the wife (f). If the trustee has no notice of the difference between the two laws, he might not be liable, but the safer course would be to make inquiry.

Presumption of death.

14. It often happens that a cestui que trust has gone abroad and has not been heard of for seven years, and in that case the law presumes for certain purposes that the person was dead at the expiration of the seven years, but not that he died at any particular moment of that period (g). But as the fact of death is presumed only, the conclusion of law may be rebutted by explanatory circumstances (a); [and the onus of proving at what particular time the death took place lies with the person asserting a right depending on the death having occurred at that time (b).] Should the person afterwards re-appear in fact, he may assert his right (c); and accordingly, where the Court pays out money on presumption of death, it requires the recipient to give security to refund it if necessary (d). It is evident therefore that a trustee in pais—that is, out of Court—cannot safely pay at the expiration of the seven years, but must accumulate the fund until he is satisfied of the actual death, or a sufficient indemnity is offered, or the sanction of the Court has been obtained (e).

Mistake.

15. [In one case it was held by Sir J. Romilly, M.R, that] if an executor or trustee has made a wrong payment, and is afterwards obliged to pay over again to the person rightfully entitled, he is not chargeable with interest, provided the erroneous payment was a bonâ fide mistake (f), [but this decision has not been acquiesced in, and seems not to be reconcilable with principle or the weight of authority (g), but] of course a wrongful payment of interest will not create in the payee a right to the principal, for no wrong can create a right (h). The trustee of a creditors' deed made a mistake in payment arising out of a misapprehension of the law, which at that time was not clear, and the Court held that as he had acted bonâ fide and was not a mere trustee, but filled a quasi judicial position, he could not be made accountable to the creditors, who were left to recover the amount from the person wrongfully paid (i).

the cestui que trust for several years without deducting the income tax, he will not be allowed afterwards to deduct the amount of such income tax on the past payments from future accretions of income (a).]

Claim by another.

17. As a trustee cannot be expected to part with the fund unless the right of the cestui que trust be undisputed, if a third person claim improperly, or refuse to say whether he claims or not in a case where the trustee has a right to ask the question, such third person will make himself amenable to costs (b).

Bond of indemnity.

18. In cases where there exists a mere shadow of doubt as to the rights of the parties interested, and it is highly improbable that any adverse claim will, in fact, be ever advanced, the protection of the trustee may be provided for by a substantial bond of indemnity. In general, however, a bond of indemnity is a very unsatisfactory safeguard, for when the danger arises, the obligors are often found insolvent, or their assets have been distributed. And if the bond be to indemnify against a breach of trust, the Court is not disposed to show mercy towards a trustee who admits himself to have wilfully erred by having endeavoured to arm himself against the consequences (c).

[Option to purchase testator's business.]

[19. It often happens that a testator engaged in trade gives an option to a son to purchase his business, and empowers his trustees to accept the bond of the son as security for payment of the purchase money by instalments. Where such an option is exercised, it may be proper for the trustees, on transferring the business and chattels, to reserve a lien for the unpaid purchase money. In a recent case it was held that a clause in an agreement conferring such a lien operated as a bill of sale within secs. 4 and 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and, not having been registered, was void as against the trustee in the subsequent bankruptcy of the son (d).]

Suit.

20. A trustee cannot be expected to incur the least risk, and therefore if the equities be not perfectly clear, he should decline to act without the sanction of the Court, and he will be allowed all costs and expenses incurred by him in an application for that purpose (a). But as a trustee is indemnified by the decree of the Court, he will appeal from any decision to the Court above at his own risk (b). If the rights be perfectly clear, and the trustee appeals to the Court without reason, he will be answerable in costs, though he do not act either fraudulently or maliciously (c).

Trustee Relief Act.

21. If there be no dispute as to the amount of the fund, but only as to who is entitled to it, and the trustee, instead of transferring the fund into Court under the provisions of the Trustee Relief Act (d), needlessly commences an action, he will be allowed only the costs that would have been incurred had he taken advantage of the Trustee Relief Act (e).

[Originating summons.]

[22. Under the Rules of Court of 1883, an inexpensive process has been introduced which enables either trustees, executors, or administrators, or their cestuis que trust, by means of an originating summons, to procure the determination without an administration by the Court of the estate or trust, of various questions and matters arising out of or affecting the trusts or the persons interested thereunder, or to obtain an order for the administration of the estate or trust without the delay and formalities of an action (f); but this form of proceeding is not applicable for the determination of questions involving charges of breach of trust (g), nor unless the question raised is one which would have arisen in the administration of an estate or the execution of a trust (h). Thus it is not applicable to cases where questions arise between the estate of a testator, or devisees and legatees under a will, or beneficiaries under an instrument, and persons claiming adversely (i); nor where the question is whether or not the defendant became trustee (a); nor to a case where an executor has distributed the fund, and administration is sought on the ground that he has by mistake overlooked in the distribution some of the cestuis que trust (b), and, in general, the procedure is only intended for the decision of simple questions (c).

Under this rule, the question of the validity of a release given by legatees, without (as they alleged) having had independent advice, has been decided (d); but in this case no objection was taken to the jurisdiction, and L. J. Cotton intimated that it was not to be taken as a precedent (e); and in a subsequent case Kay, J., declined to entertain a similar application (f).

[Present practice.]

23. Under the present practice it is in many cases less expensive to determine the point in dispute in an action, or by originating summons, than by the aid of the Trustee Relief Act, and in such cases a trustee ought not to adopt the more expensive process (g), and if he do so without sufficient justification, he will be made to pay the additional costs necessitated by his conduct (h).

[Order for general administration not usually made.]

24. Under the new Rules of Court (i), it is not obligatory on the Court to make an order for the administration of any trust, or of the estate of any deceased person, if the questions between the parties can be properly determined without administration, and the Court usually refuses to make an order for general administration, unless satisfied that it is necessary for the protection of the trustees or executors (j). An order for accounts and inquiries will be made under Order 15, if the circumstances of the case require it (k); but the Court will not direct the ordinary accounts under Order 15, where charges of breach of trust are made which may necessitate accounts being directed at the hearing on a different footing (l).

sufficient accounts have been rendered, the Court may order the application to stand over for a certain time, and that the executors, administrators, or trustees in the meantime shall render a proper account, with an intimation that if this is not done they may be made to pay the costs of the proceedings (a); and when necessary to prevent proceedings by other creditors, may make the usual judgment or order for administration, with a proviso that no proceedings are to be taken under such judgment or order without leave of the judge in person.

In considering whether an administration order ought to be made, the Court will have regard to a direction by the testator that his executors shall take proceedings to have his estate administered by the Court (b).

Frame of the action.

25. If an action be necessary it] may be instituted either by the trustee or by the cestui que trust; but in most cases an action is sustained rather than originated by the trustee. Whether the trustee be plaintiff or defendant, he should take care before an order is made, that all proper parties are before the Court, for if the trustee fail in his duty to point out the proper parties, it might be held that the order of the Court under such circumstances did not indemnify him.

[If the trustee is plaintiff, and his accounts are directed to be taken, the conduct of the proceedings will be given to the defendants (c).]

Plaintiff held to have no interest.

26. Where the suit is commenced by a cestui que trust, and it is found at the hearing that upon the true construction of the instrument he has no interest in the fund, yet if the point was so doubtful that the fund could not have been distributed without the opinion of the Court, and either the fund is administered by the Court under the suit of the plaintiff, or the Court makes a declaration of the rights of the parties in the suit, the plaintiff will as a general rule have his costs (d.) But where a plaintiff, instituting proceedings as claiming a contingent interest, obtains an order for taking the accounts in an administration suit, and pending the reference his interest ceases, and the parties interested instead of adopting repudiate the proceedings, the plaintiff cannot have his costs (e).

Alterations in practice.

27. The Court, according to the old practice, could not have made a mere declaratory order without consequential directions (a), and could not have administered the trust in the presence of some only of the parties interested, or as to a part only of the trust estate, or as to the rights of persons entitled under a will without taking preliminary accounts; but [under the present practice] the Court is authorised to make declaratory orders merely, as also to adjudicate on questions in the presence of some only of the persons interested, and as to part only of the trust estate, and without ascertaining the particulars or accounts of the property touching which the question has arisen (b).

Special case.

28. The opinion of the Court may also be obtained upon a special case [in the manner provided by] Sir George Turner's Act, 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35 (c); but where the parties are numerous, it is found in practice that much time is consumed, and expense incurred, in settling the case so as to meet the different views of the parties, and [it will generally be found a shorter and simpler course to issue a writ of summons, and then state the question in the form of a special case under Order 34 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883.]

St. Leonards' Act.

29. By Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 30, any trustee, executor, or administrator may, without suit by petition or by summons upon a written statement at Chambers, apply to the Court for its opinion, advice, or direction upon any question respecting the management or administration of the trust property, or assets of the testator or intestate. By the Amendment Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 38, s. 9, the application is required to be signed by counsel (d), and the Judge, where necessary, may require the attendance of counsel (e).

Authority from the cestui que trust to receive the money.

30. When the trustee is satisfied as to the parties rightfully entitled, he may pay the money either to the parties themselves, or to an agent empowered by them to receive it; and the authority need not be by power of attorney, or by deed, or even in writing. The trustee is safe if he can prove the authority however communicated. But a trustee would not be acting prudently if he parted with the fund to an agent without some document producible at any moment by which he could establish the fact of the agency.

Genuineness of the authority.

31. The trustee must look well to the genuineness of the authority, for if he pay to a wrong party it will be at his own peril. Thus, where A., possessed of 1000*l.* Million Bank stock, employed B., a broker, to receive the dividends for her, and B. forged a letter of attorney authorising him to sell the stock, and a sale was effected accordingly, it was decreed by Lord Northington that the company must bear the loss: for "a trustee," he said, "whether a private person or body corporate, must see to the reality of the authority empowering him to dispose of the trust money; and if the transfer be made without the authority of the owner, the act is a nullity, and in consideration of law and equity the rights remain as before" (a).

Mortgage forged by trustee's solicitor.

32. Where a trustee [handed over money to his solicitor for investment, and subsequently took] a supposed mortgage, but which, in fact, had been forged by the trustee's own solicitor, and the trustee did not take all the precautions that he might have done (viz., by calling for a receipt under the hands of the mortgagor for the money), it was held that the loss must fall on the trustee, and was not to be borne by the trust estate so as to fall upon the cestui que trust (b).

Cestui que trust abroad.

33. A cestui que trust is often abroad, and then the trustee cannot be sure that at the time of payment under the power of attorney the cestui que trust is alive, and if he were dead the power of attorney would be at an end (c). If, however, the cestui

It was not a specific investment, it was handed to the solicitor, and in that point of view the case is intelligible enough upon the ground that it was not right for the trustee to hand over the money to the solicitor for the purpose of investment," per L. J. Lindley, Re Speight, 22 Ch. Div. 727, 761;] and see Hopgood v. Parkin, 11 L. R. Eq. 75; Sutton v. Wilders, 12 L. R. Eq. 373.

[(c) Now by the Conveyancing Act, que trust give to the trustee a written direction by deed or otherwise to pay money to a particular person, any payment made under such written direction, until it is revoked, and the revocation comes to the knowledge of the trustee, would be binding on the cestui que trust's executors (a). A convenient course in cases of this kind is to transmit the money to a Bank abroad, making it payable to the order of the cestui que trust; but where the cestui que trust is unable to receive his money in person, his direction had better be asked as to the particular mode of remittance to be adopted. By Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 26, a trustee paying under a power of attorney is expressly exempted from liability, notwithstanding the death of [or avoidance of the power by] the person who gave the power of attorney, provided the trustee did not know of such death [or avoidance] at the time of payment (b); [and this has been extended by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, to cases of payments or acts made or done by any person in good faith since the 31st December, 1881, and applies whether "the donor of the power has died or become lunatic, of unsound mind or bankrupt, or has revoked the power," if the fact was not known to the donee of the power at the time of exercising it (c).]

Letters of administration.

34. If a legacy to a wife be a small sum, as under 50*l.*, and the husband survives her, the Court orders payment to him without taking out letters of administration to the wife (d) ; and, on the other hand, where the wife has survived, the Court has ordered a small sum, as a legacy of 13*l.*, to which the husband was entitled, to be paid to the widow, without taking out administration to the husband (e). But the Court refused to order payment to the husband, without letters of administration to the wife, of a sum of 80*l.*, and remarked that the husband was not liable after the wife's death for her debts contracted before marriage, and that the fund would get into a wrong channel (a). Where a married woman was entitled to a small sum under 50*l.*, representing real estate, the Court ordered it to be paid to her without a deed of acknowledgment (b). It is presumed that a trustee, acting in a similar manner under similar circumstances, would be protected by the Court.

Payment to an infant.

35. A testamentary guardian has, by Act of Parliament (12 Car. 2. c. 24), the "custody, tuition and management of the infant's goods, chattels, and personal estate" [and this has generally been considered as not] authorising a trustee to pay to the guardian a capital sum to which the infant is entitled. [But under the corresponding Irish Act, 14 & 15 Car. 2. c. 19 (Ir.) it has been held that the receipt of the testamentary guardian for a legacy of the infant is a good discharge (c); and in a recent case in England, Fry, J., while refusing payment to the testamentary guardian of a legacy which had been paid into Court under the Legacy Duty Act (d), on the special ground that the testamentary guardian was not a "person entitled" within the meaning of that Act, intimated that he had no intention of interfering with the decision in the Irish case (e); and] where an infant cestui que trust represented himself to be of age, and induced the trustee to pay him, it was held that as the infant was old enough to commit a fraud, the trustee was not liable to him over again when he came of age (f).

Lunatic.

36. The mere appointment by the Court of the committee of the estate of a lunatic, would not justify a trustee in paying trust-money, to which the lunatic is entitled, to the committee of his estate, in the absence of any special power to receive conferred upon him by the Court.

Payment to a partner.

37. Where a debt is owing to a firm jointly the amount may be paid to the surviving partners without the concurrence of the representatives of the deceased partners (g).

Payment to a single trustee.

38. The Court will not, in the exercise of its discretion, except under special circumstances (a), pay out money to a single trustee who has survived his co-trustees (b); and a trustee out of Court would do well to throw all the protection he can about a trust fund; but it must not be inferred that he would not be safe in paying to a single surviving trustee, for payment to a surviving trustee for sale is of constant occurrence. [In cases of sales under the Settled Land Act, 1882, it must be borne in mind that sect. 39 expressly provides that capital money arising under that Act shall not be paid to fewer than two persons as trustees of a settlement, unless the settlement authorises the receipt by one trustee (c).]

Overpayment.

39. If a trustee or executor has made an overpayment in error to a cestui que trust or legatee, he has a right to recoup himself out of any other interest in the trust fund of that cestui que trust or legatee (d).

Repayment to executor.

The Court will not generally, in favour of an executor, make an order on a legatee to refund personally (e); and it certainly will not make an order to refund to an executor who voluntarily and in spite of expression of doubts on the part of a legatee has made overpayments to the latter (f); and the Court will not, it seems, at the instance of an executor who is liable to a creditor, compel a purchaser from a legatee to refund (g). But an executor who has been made to pay a creditor, and has under his control a legacy appropriated by him as such, but not actually paid over, has been allowed to throw the debt upon the legacy (h), but is disentitled to his costs of obtaining relief (i). And an executor who has distributed assets amongst residuary legatees, with notice, not of an existing debt, but [merely of a liability which may become a debt, as for example a liability to possible future calls on shares], may, if called upon to pay such debt, recover back from the residuary legatees the amount paid to them, but without interest (j).

tarily paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered, if money be paid to a trustee in bankruptcy under a mistake of law the Court will order it to be refunded, for "the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be as honest as other people," and to "act in the way in which any highminded man would act" (a), and the same principle extends to a liquidator or other officer of the Court (b).]

Rights of creditors.

40. A creditor who is not barred by the Statute of Limitations, or to whose debt the statute is not pleaded, may recover assets from a legatee to whom they have been erroneously paid by the executor (c), but not from purchasers for value, as from persons claiming under a marriage settlement (d); [and where the residuary estate had been assigned by the surviving executor to the residuary legatees, it was held by the Court of Appeal that a creditor might proceed against the residuary legatees without making the executor a party to the action (e). But, as the right of the creditors "is a right only in equity, equitable considerations, if sufficiently weighty, will make it the duty of the Court not to grant that equitable relief to which under ordinary circumstances creditors are entitled" (f), and accordingly the relief was refused to mortgagees of real estate whose security was insufficient, but who had assented to the distribution of the personalty among the residuary legatees (g). A claim against the executor personally for a devastavit in distributing the assets without providing for a simple contract debt is barred after six years from the time of the devastavit (h); though he may be made liable after the expiration of that period, on the ground of breach of trust in an action to administer his testator's estate (i). And an executor cannot, when called upon to account, set up his own devastavit as a defence, and then claim the benefit of the Statute of Limitations (a).]

Rights of cestuis que trust.

41. A cestui que trust may, notwithstanding the Statute of Limitations, if there has been no improper laches, recover from another cestui que trust an overpayment erroneously made to him by the trustee (b); and residuary legatees, plaintiffs in a suit, have been ordered to refund to unpaid particular legatees (c).

Overpayment through misconduct of a cestui que trust.

42. Where a trustee had paid to wrong parties upon the evidence of certificates which had been forged by one of the cestuis que trust, the Court not only compelled repayment by the wrong parties of what each had received, but also ordered the cestui que trust who had forged the certificates, to make up to the parties rightfully entitled, to the relief of the trustee, what should not be repaid (d); and in suits against trustees for breaches of trust, the Court has ordered a tenant for life who was overpaid by the breach of trust, to pay back to the trustees without the institution of another suit for the purpose (e). [But where trust money had been invested incautiously by trustees on a 5 per cent. mortgage, and on the failure of the security the trustees were ordered to replace the fund with interest at 4 per cent., it was held that the tenant for life could not be called upon to return to the trustees the additional 1 per cent. which he had received (f).]

Settlement with one residuary legatee.

43. If one of several residuary legatees receives only what is his fair share at the time, the subsequent wasting of the assets will not entitle the other residuary legatees to call upon him to refund; for if the executor renders his accounts to a residuary legatee and pays him his share, what right or business has such residuary legatee to interfere further in the matter of the administration of the estate? He cannot take proceedings for the administration of it; and, were he to do so, he would probably have to pay the costs. If so, why is he to suffer for the laches and neglect of the other residuary legatees, who have not required the executor to account to them or to pay over the balance in his hands or due from him (a)? [The principle has been applied to a case where a beneficiary, who in the result proved to have been overpaid, was one of the trustees of the will, and an order on further consideration in an administration action had been made, and there was nothing to show that the deficiency had not arisen from subsequent wasting of the estate (b). And where payments were rightly made to certain appointees, and afterwards an unavoidable loss occurred by which the trust funds were rendered insufficient to pay all in full, there being no hotchpot clause, the payments so made were final and not to be brought into account (c).

However, if any question of construction of the will is likely to arise as to any share, which will involve costs which are properly payable out of the general estate, the trustee should retain a sufficient sum to protect himself against such costs (d).]

Release.

44. On the final adjustment of the trust accounts it is usual for the trustee, on handing over the balance to the parties entitled, to require from them an acknowledgment that all claims and demands have been settled (e). It is reasonable, that when the trustee parts with the whole fund, and so denudes himself of the means of defence, he should be placed by the party receiving the benefit in the utmost security against future litigation. But a receipt in full of all claims extends only to all claims that are then known (f).

In practice it is usual to require a release under seal, for although an acquittance of this kind may be opened by the cestui que trust on showing fraud, concealment, or mistake, it is primâ facie a solemn, simple, and valid defence, and throws on the relessor the heavy onus of displacing it (g). In strict right, however, a trustee in the absence of special circumstances cannot insist upon a release under seal (h). But it has been held that an executor, though he cannot insist on a release from a pecuniary legatee (a), yet on the estate being wound up, has a right to a release from the residuary legatee (b).

In one case (c), where the trust was by parol for A. for life, and on her death for B. and C., and the costs of the suit depended on the question whether the trustee ought, as required, to have transferred the sums on the joint receipt of A., B. and C., or whether he was right in refusing, unless they executed a release under seal, Vice Chancellor Kindersley decided that the trustee was entitled to a release on the grounds, first, that the trust was by parol, and secondly, that the time of payment, according to the tenor of the deed, was anticipated, as the tenant for life was still living. These reasons are not satisfactory. The circumstance that the trust was by parol, and therefore obscure, might have been an excuse for not paying at all, or ground for demanding an indemnity; but seems to afford no reason for requiring a release under seal, as distinguished from a simple receipt or acquittance in writing. Neither does the anticipation of the time appear to be material, for A., B. and C. were admitted to be the only cestuis que trust, and their concurrence in the receipt was equivalent to a reduction into possession (d). King v. Mullins.

In another case, V. C. Wood observed, that every trustee had a right to have some sort of a discharge, perhaps not a release, unless the trust was created by an instrument under seal (e). But no such distinction has ever yet been made, and V. C. Kindersley, as we have seen, required a release because the trust was by parol.

[45. A release of the executors and the estate of the testator given by a pecuniary legatee on payment of part of his legacy, on the footing of the estate being insufficient for payment of the legacies in full, will not enure for the benefit of the residuary legatee, if, by reason of additional funds falling in, the estate subsequently becomes sufficient to make a further payment to the legatees (f).] [Property falling in after release.]

46. The trust fund is not unfrequently transferred from the trustees of an old settlement to the trustees of a new settlement, and the trustees of the old settlement insist on a general release before they will part with the fund, while, on the other hand, Release from trustees to trustees.

the trustees of the new settlement feel a reluctance to give more than a simple receipt. The requisition of the trustees of the old settlement has usually been complied with, but perhaps it could not be enforced (a). Of course, the trustees of the new settlement cannot be called upon to enter into any covenant of indemnity.

Expense of the release.

47. As the party to benefit by the deed is, in general, the one to prepare it, the release will be drawn by the solicitor of the trustee. Another reason would be that the trustee has the necessary documents in his possession. The expense must be paid out of the trust fund.

Order of the Court.

48. When a trustee pays money under the direction of the Court, he is indemnified by the order itself, and is not entitled to any release from the parties (b). It would be impossible to hold a trustee answerable for an act not done by himself, but by the Court. It is the duty, however, of the trustee to fully inform the Court of all the material facts within his knowledge, and if he improperly withheld them, he would be made responsible for the results of his suppression of facts.

12 & 13 Vict. c. 74.

52. This Act did not enable the major part of trustees to pay in or transfer a fund where the other trustees had a legal control over the fund and would not concur. But by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 74, it was enacted, that where moneys, annuities, stocks, or securities were vested in persons as trustees, executors, administrators, or otherwise, and the major part of them were desirous of transferring the funds into Court under the Trustee Relief Act, the Court, on a petition presented under the said Act for that purpose, might direct the transfer by the major part, without the concurrence of the rest, and might make an order on the necessary parties to permit such a transfer.

Payment into County Court.

54. Protection against creditors, &c.

55. Trustees who are also executors may be embarrassed as to the distribution of the trust fund, not merely by the difficulty in ascertaining who are their cestuis que trust, but by reason of the possible existence of paramount claims on the part of creditors or others. To meet this difficulty provision was made by Sir George Turner's Act (a) for directing a reference, upon motion or petition of course, to inquire whether there were any outstanding debts or liabilities affecting the estate of any deceased person, and for enabling the personal representative to distribute the estate subject to the result of the inquiry, without the cost of a general administration under the direction of the Court; and by a more recent enactment, the benefit of these provisions might be obtained by summons at chambers (b).

By Lord St. Leonards' Act (a), even the necessity of an application to the Court under that of Sir George Turner was in most cases rendered unnecessary, it being by Lord St. Leonards' Act in substance enacted that executors and administrators, after giving such notices for creditors and others (b) to send in their claims as would have been given by the Court of Chancery, may at the expiration of the time named in the notices proceed to distribute the estate, without being liable for any claim of which they shall not have had notice at the time of distribution (c). CHAPTER XV.

THE DUTIES OF TRUSTEES OF RENEWABLE LEASEHOLDS.

Upon this head we propose—I. To examine the preliminary question, in what cases the obligation to renew is imposed by the settlement. II. To inquire in what manner the trustees are to levy the fines payable upon the renewals.

I. In what cases the obligation to renew is imposed by the settlement.

Settlement of leaseholds does not per se imply a direction to renew.

1. It might naturally be supposed, that, from the very circumstance of the leaseholds being of a renewable character, a settlement of them to several persons in succession would per se imply a right in the remainderman to call upon the tenant for life to contribute to the fine (a); and indeed Lord Thurlow, in the instance of a lease which had not previously been treated as renewable, observed, "The cases in which the nature of the estate or the will of the testator compels a renewal, appear not to apply to the present: where there is no such custom, or direction, it is in the discretion of the tenant for life to renew or not" (b). However, it seems to be now established generally, that, in a devise of renewable leaseholds without the interposition of a trustee, the remainderman cannot oblige the tenant for life to contribute to the fine (c); and so it was determined even where the devise was expressly made, "subject to the payment of all fines, and as they became due yearly and for every year" (d). However, as the interest given is in its nature capable of renewal, the Court says, "If the tenant for life do renew, he shall not by converting the new acquisition to his own use derive an unconscientious benefit out of the estate" (e); but on the remainderman's contributing to the fine, shall be regarded as a trustee, and shall hold the renewed interest upon the trusts of the settlement (a).

Whether a direction to renew will be implied by the interposition of a trustee.

2. Will the interposition of a trustee sufficiently indicate an intention of obliging the tenant for life to renew? "In a devise to trustees," says Lord Hardwicke, "if cestui que trust for life be one of the lives, I should doubt whether such cestui que trust could be compellable to contribute; but here all these lives were strangers; the intent of the testator certainly was, that the lease should continue, and be kept on foot, and something must be done for a renewal though nothing is mentioned" (b). Lord Alvanley on one occasion alluded to the point, but said he was not called upon to decide it (c). In Hulkes v. Barrow (d), where the devise was to trustees upon trust to permit one to receive the rents for life, with remainders over, "subject to the payments of the rents and performance of the covenants reserved and contained, or to be reserved and contained, in the present or future leases, whereby such premises were or should be held, and also all taxes, fines and expenses attending the premises," it was held that the obligation of renewing the lease was imposed by the will. And in Lock v. Lock (e), where a testator had devised a college lease of twenty-one years to his wife for life, remainder to her son, she paying 10*l.* per annum to her son during her life; it was ruled, that, as the testator contemplated the continuance of the lease during the life of the wife, she was bound to renew. These, however, were cases accompanied with special circumstances. It has since been decided by Lord Plunket, in Ireland, that a settlement with the mere interposition of a trustee does not impose an obligation to renew (f).

Whether implied in a marriage settlement.

3. Where leaseholds of this kind are made the subject of a marriage settlement, it may be argued, that as the parents and issue who have any interest given them are purchasers for value, the enjoyment of the tenant for life should be consistent with that of the other subsequent takers. But in Lawrence v. Maggs (g),

(a) Nightingale v. Lawson, 1 B. C. C. 440; Stone v. Theed, 2 B. C. C. 248, per Lord Thurlow; Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 B. C. C. 291; Fitzroy v. Howard, 3 Russ. 225.

(f) O'Ferrall v. O'Ferrall, Ll. & G. Rep. temp. Plunket, 79. In Trench v. St. George, 1 Dru. & Walsh, 417, before the same Judge, it is not clear whether his Lordship did or not consider the will as creating an obligation to renew, but it would rather appear that he did. The remainderman was held not liable to contribute towards the renewal fines in favour of the tenant for life, except as respected certain fines paid subsequently to 1819, as to which the remainderman submitted to contribute. See Ib. p. 454 et seq.

(g) 1 Eden, 453. Search has been the case of a marriage settlement with trustees interposed, but without any mention of renewals, Lord Northington was apparently of opinion that the tenant for life was not bound to renew.

Implied in articles for a settlement.

4. If renewable leaseholds upon marriage be articled to be settled, the Court will, in executing the settlement, insert the proper direction for renewals. This, it seems, was directly determined in Graham v. Lord Londonderry (a): and the case of Lawrence v. Maggs, before Lord Northington, was cited before Lord Thurlow in Pickering v. Vowles (b), as establishing the same doctrine; but it appears by the report taken from Lord Northington's own MS. that the Bar were mistaken in this (c). However, Lord Thurlow himself seems to have entertained that opinion, for in the same case of Pickering v. Vowles, where the property was articled to be settled, but there was no direction for renewals, his Lordship said, "It was intended the lease should be fully estated, and that the husband and wife should have life estates, and that so fully estated it should go to the children."

Of discretionary renewals.

5. A direction for renewals where successive estates are limited is sometimes in the form of a discretionary power. The instrument may, indeed, be so specially worded, that the power should be perfectly arbitrary; but if the proviso be simply that "it shall be lawful for the trustees to renew, from time to time, as occasion may require, and as they may think proper," the clause will be construed, not as conferring an option upon the trustees of renewing or not, but as a safeguard against any unreasonable demands on the part of the lessor (d).

23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, ss. 8, 9.

[6. By an Act passed 28*th August*, 1860, provisions were made for the renewal of leases by trustees under instruments executed since the date of the Act. These provisions were repealed by the Settled Land Act, 1882 (e), but have been in substance re-enacted, and extended to all trusts, whatever the date of their creation, by the Trustee Act, 1888 (f), by which it is enacted as follows:—

7. By another Act, passed 28*th August*, 1860, where any estate or interest under any lease or grant from an ecclesiastical corporation, is vested in a person as trustee, whether expressly or by implication of law, with a power to raise money for procuring a renewal, or where such power is vested in any person, it is made lawful for such person to raise money for the purpose 23 & 24 Vict. c. 124.

of purchasing the reversion or otherwise enfranchising the property (a); and it has been held that this enactment confers a power not only to raise the money, but also to effect the purchase or enfranchisement (b). But this will not authorise the trustees to make any arrangement with the reversioners which will disturb the relative rights of the tenant for life and the remaindermen under the settlement; and where it was proposed to surrender part of the leaseholds in consideration of a release of the reversion of the rest of the leaseholds, and the interests of the tenant for life would suffer by the arrangement, the Court had no power, without the consent of the tenant for life, to give effect to the proposal, though beneficial on the whole (c).

How fines on renewals to be levied.

II. We next proceed to inquire in what manner the fines for renewals are to be levied by the trustees.

Upon this subject we shall advert, First, to the case where the settlor himself has specifically marked out the fund from which the fines are to be raised, and Secondly, to the rules adopted by the Court, where the settlor himself has omitted to declare any intention.

First. Where the fund for the fines is pointed out.

How to be levied out of "rents, issues, and profits," where the leases are for years.

1. If there be an express trust to provide the fines for renewals out of the "rents, issues, and profits," and the leaseholds are terms of years not determinable on lives, so that the times of renewal can be certainly ascertained, it will be the duty of the trustees to lay by every year such a proportion of the annual income as against the period of renewal will constitute a fund sufficient for the purpose (d).

Fines to be levied out of rents and profits, or by mortgage.

2. If the trust be to levy the fines for renewal out of the "rents, issues, and profits, or by mortgage," it was held in a case before Sir J. Leach that the annual rents only would in the first instance be applicable, for he considered the authority to mortgage not as making it optional with the trustees whether they should or not affect the interests of the remainderman, by throwing the charge of the renewal upon the corpus of the property, but as given for the protection of the cestuis que trust in case the amount of the fine should not be otherwise forthcoming (a), and intimated that should the trustees be under the necessity of mortgaging, the Court would call back from the party in possession the amount of the incumbrance thus temporarily incurred (b). However, in the later case of Jones v. Jones (c), where the trustees were empowered to levy the fines "by and out of the rents, issues, and profits, or by mortgage, or by such other ways and means as should be advisable," the Court, after observing that to levy the fines from the rents would throw them on the tenant for life, while a mortgage would be oppressive to the remainderman, declined to give any opinion whether the trustees might not, had they exercised their discretion, have determined upon whom the burthen should fall; but as the trustees had not exercised their discretion, it was held that the Court could adjust the onus amongst the parties according to the equitable rule, viz. in proportion to their actual enjoyment, as soon as it could be ascertained (d). And in Greenwood v. Evans (e), Reeves v. Creswick (f), Ainslie v. Harcourt (g), where the fines were to be raised out of the rents, issues, and profits, or by mortgage, the Court in like manner adopted the principle of throwing the onus on the successive tenants of the estate, in proportion to their enjoyment (h). In the first two cases the leaseholds were for lives, and in the last the leaseholds were partly for lives and partly for years, but no distinction was taken on that account. The present leaning of the Courts would appear, therefore, to be, to consider the language of the instrument as directing only the temporary mode of raising the fines, without prejudice to the ultimate equitable adjustment according to the principles now acted upon in equity in ordinary cases. But if the trusts be to pay the renewal fines by and out of "the annual rents, issues, and profits," with a power, if the money wanted for renewal be not produced, to raise it by mortgage, the onus will fall upon the tenant for life (i).

How to be levied when the leases are for lives.

3. If the leaseholds be either for lives or for years determinable on lives, and the trust is to raise the fines for renewal out of the "rents, issues, and profits," the expenses of renewal must still be cast upon the annual rents, if it clearly appear that such were meant, though from the uncertainty of the time, the trustees cannot be sure they shall have accumulated an adequate fund.

Whether rents and profits mean annual rents.

4. But the expression "rents, issues, and profits," often stands by itself, without any sufficient indication aliunde that annual rents are intended, and then the question arises, and is attended with great difficulty, whether the fines shall be raised out of the annual rents or the corpus.

Stone v. Theed.

In Stone v. Theed (a), Lord Thurlow held that the annual rents only were applicable. In Allan v. Backhouse (b) Sir T. Plumer considered that the trustees might sell or mortgage, and that the tenant for life and remainderman must contribute in the usual proportions, and this decision was affirmed on appeal by Lord Eldon (c). In Shaftesbury v. Marlborough (d) Sir J. Leach observed upon the conflict between the preceding cases, and followed the authority of Lord Thurlow. [In Re Barber's Settled Estates (e), the authority of Allan v. Backhouse was conceded without argument.]

(j) 3 Y. & C. 715. It is stated in the report that "there were no funds provided for the purpose of renewal by the testator's will;" from which it might be supposed that the will was altogether silent upon the subject, but Mr. Shapter, Q.C., who had occasion to consult the Reg. Lib. obligingly furnished the author with the following extract from the will: "It shall be lawful for my said trustees, and the survivor of them, and the heirs, executors, administrators and assigns respectively of such survivor to renew, or use their or his endeavours to renew, the leases for the time being of such part of my said estates as shall be accustomably renewable from time to time and as often as occasion shall require, and for that purpose to make such surrenders of the then leases, or any renewed leases, as shall be requisite and necessary in that behalf, and by and out of the rents, issues, and profits, of the premises, the leases whereof may be so renewed, or by mortgage thereof, to raise so much monies as shall be sufficient for paying the several renewal fines and other necessary charges for such renewals."

the burthen amongst the successive tenants, according to their enjoyment.

The result appears to be that where the direction is to raise the fines out of "the rents, issues, and profits," simply, the Court may be compelled, by the express language of the instrument, to throw the fines upon the annual rents, but will lean strongly against such a construction, and where the trustees are empowered to raise the fines out of "the rents, issues, and profits, or by mortgage," it will hold the discretion to apply only to the temporary means of raising the fund, and will apportion the burthen according to the general rule (a). Result of the cases.

5. On a reference to the Master in Chancery by Sir J. Leach, how a fund for payment of fines on the renewal of leaseholds for lives, where the fines were to be paid from the annual rents, could best be secured, the Master proposed in his report, that each of the lives, upon which the leases were held, should be insured against the life of the tenant for life in a sum sufficient to cover the amount of the fine, and that the premiums upon the policies should be paid out of the annual rents and profits (b). Upon this arrangement we must remark that the lives of the cestuis que vie ought to have been insured unconditionally, and not against the life of the tenant for life, for the estate was continually deteriorating as the lives wore out, and the remainderman was entitled to have good lives or equivalent insurances. In leaseholds for years, the remainderman has a right to a proportional accumulation towards the payment of the next fine, and why is not the same principle to prevail in the case of leaseholds for lives? Subject to this observation, a more convenient mode of raising the fines could not perhaps be suggested, and a trustee under similar circumstances would scarcely incur a risk in acting upon it at his own discretion. Of raising the fines by way of insurance.

6. Where freeholds and leaseholds for lives are limited to the same uses, it is usual, from the difficulty of mortgaging leaseholds vested in trustees (who will not covenant beyond their own acts), to insert a power to charge the freeholds for raising the fines; and it would be well to provide that the freeholds and leaseholds might be joined together in the security, and that the loan should precede other charges created by the settlement, and that the corpus of the property should be subject to the mortgage, so as Power to charge freeholds for raising fines.

to shut out the question of apportionment between the tenant for life and the remainderman.

Who shall have the accumulations where renewal cannot be had.

7. [Where there is an absolute trust for renewal of leaseholds out of the rents and profits overriding the interest of the tenant for life, but from the unwillingness or incapacity of the lessor no renewal can be obtained, it is the duty of the trustees to make the best arrangement which is practicable for rendering the property permanent for the benefit of the persons successively entitled, either by purchasing the reversion where this can be done on advantageous terms, and with a due regard to the interests of the successive cestuis que trust, or by converting the leaseholds and investing the proceeds, allowing the tenant for life only the income of the investments during his life (a); but where no absolute trust for renewal exists, although] a portion of the annual rents and profits may have been destined by the settlor to defray the expenses of renewals, if no renewal can be obtained, the sums which would have been raised will be regarded as a charge which fails of taking effect, and will merge for the benefit of the tenant for life (b).

Who must compensate the remainderman where no renewal has been made.

8. If a trustee (c), or tenant for life in the situation of a trustee (d), fail in his duty to apply the given fund, the remainderman may call for a compensation from such trustee, or tenant for life, or their assets. But when, by the permission of the trustee, the tenant for life has been in the full enjoyment of the rents and profits without deduction for renewals, though the trustee is primarily answerable to the remainderman, yet the tenant for life, who has had the actual pernancy, must to that extent make it good to the trustee (e).

profits, was declared entitled to the fines paid annually by the under-lessees (a).

How fines to be levied where no direction by the settlor.

Secondly. It often happens that renewable leaseholds are devised to trustees with a direction, either expressed or implied, to keep the leases continually renewed, but without any declaration of intention out of what fund the settlor meant the expenses to be levied.

Where paid by tenant for life or remainderman.

1. Where this is the case, the tenant for life and remainderman may possibly agree to contribute towards the fine out of their own pockets, at the time of the renewal; or if the tenant for life and remainderman cannot agree to join in raising the fine, one of them may be willing to advance the whole amount pro tempore out of his own pocket, and then an apportionment on the principles adopted by the Court may be compelled between the tenant for life's estate and the remainderman at the tenant for life's decease, and either party advancing the fine will have a lien on the renewed lease for the amount expended beyond his proportional part. If the tenant for life and remainderman will neither jointly, nor will either of them singly advance the fine, then it is said the trustees must raise the expenses out of the estate by way of mortgage (b); and at the tenant for life's decease the apportionment must be made in like manner. However, a mortgage, where neither the tenant for life nor remainderman will make the advance, is more easily to be suggested than to be carried into effect, for few persons would be disposed to lend their money on such a security, in the absence of any express power to mortgage. In such a case, therefore, it seems necessary to have recourse to the Court, except where the difficulty is met by the provisions of the Act before referred to (c).

Mortgage by trustees.

Old rule of contribution.

2. The old rule of contribution was, that the tenant for life should advance one-third, and the remainderman two-thirds (d); but the question was put by Lord Thurlow, "Is a tenant for life at the age of ninety-nine, whose title accrued in possession when he was ninety-eight, to pay one-third—a great deal more than any possible enjoyment? According to that rule, a man of the age of ninety-nine, who has the enjoyment only of ten days, pays as much as a man of twenty-five" (a).

Rule of keeping down the interest on the fine.

3. Lord Alvanley adopted the rule (b), (and from the case of Lawrence v. Maggs, it would seem that Lord Northington had before acted upon the same principle (c),) that the tenant for life should merely keep down the interest of the fine. But Lord Eldon said, "he could not agree to that: in the case of tenant for life and remainderman in tail or in fee, the inheritance being charged with the mortgage, it was fair the tenant for life should only keep down the interest, for the natural division was, that he who had the corpus should take the burthen, and he who had only the fruit should pay to the extent of the fruit of the debt: but leases, whether for lives or years, were in their nature temporary, and therefore the position that the tenant for life was bound to pay the interest was to be understood with this qualification, that he was further bound to contribute a due proportion of the principal according to the benefit he derived from the renewed interest" (d).

Court will not act on speculative calculations.

4. It might be thought reasonable that the proportion of the expense to fall upon the tenant for life should be regulated by his actual age and probable duration of life; but it has been said that accident might render such a course unjust to the one party or the other, according as the tenant for life happened to live a longer or shorter period than was allowed by the calculation (e).

Present rule of contribution.

5. The rule now in operation was first clearly laid down by Lord Thurlow in Nightingale v. Lawson (f), a case, said Lord Eldon (who was one of the counsel in it) to which, from the intricacy of the subject, the reports have failed to do justice (g).

Nightingale v. Lawson.

The circumstances may be briefly stated as follows: A widow, tenant for life of a term which had twelve years to run, renewed for a further term of twenty-eight years, to commence from the expiration of the twelve years, and afterwards renewed for the additional term of fourteen years to commence from the expiration of the twenty-eight years. The widow lived through the original term of twelve years, and through nine of the renewed term of twenty-eight years. The question was raised after the death of the widow, in what proportions the tenant for life and the remainderman should contribute to the fines. The following points were resolved by Lord Thurlow, after very anxious, frequent, and grave consideration of the subject (a), and have ever since been acquiesced in by the Courts.

Proportions to be paid by the tenant for life and remainderman.

(A) "That, as the widow had lived nine years after the expiration of the twelve, leaving nineteen years to run of the twenty-eight, the Master ought to take the sum paid by her for the renewal of the lease as the value of the term purchased, that is, of the term of twenty-eight years, to commence at the expiration of the twelve years; he should then consider the value of the term of nine years after the existing term, and what the term of nineteen years after the existing term and the nine years was worth, and the latter was the proportion to be paid by the remainderman" (b). (Upon which resolution Lord Eldon thus comments: "It was first considered," he said, "what the interest of the tenant for life was in that term which had to run out at the time of the renewal, and then what benefit the tenant for life had received by the enjoyment of the renewed term from the period when the old term would have expired; and Lord Thurlow determined that the remainderman took that interest in the renewed term which was ultra so much of the renewed term as expired in the lifetime of the person who renewed, and the value of that interest he made the remainderman pay" (c).)

Kind of interest.

(B) "That as to the kind of interest to be allowed, simple interest would not be a satisfaction, as the widow had laid out her money totally, and the value of the lease was calculated upon the ground of compound interest: compound interest was therefore to be computed upon the proportional value of the nineteen years' term to the whole expense of renewal" (d).

Rate of interest.

(C) "That as to the rate of interest, in computing compound interest, you go upon the idea that the interest is paid upon the exact day and immediately laid out; but as this was impossible, it would be sufficient to compute interest at 4 per cent." (e).

Rate after the death of the tenant for life.

(D) "That such interest was only to be paid till the widow's death, for after that her executors had the demand upon the re-

Case of tenant for life having had no enjoyment.

(E) "With respect to the second renewal, as the widow had not lived to enjoy any part of that term, her executors were entitled to the whole of the expenses, with interest to be computed on the same principle as before" (b).

Risk of losing the contribution.

6. In this case, it will be observed, the tenant for life had disbursed the fine and, the payment being a charge upon the property, the widow was in no danger of eventually losing her demand. But where the tenant for life has not the means of renewing, but the remainderman comes forward with the money, if the contribution is to be suspended till the death of the tenant for life, it may happen, that, when the proportions can at last be ascertained, the estate of the tenant for life may be insolvent, and so the contribution be lost. "I admit," says Lord Eldon, "there is this difficulty in the case; but perhaps from the nature of the thing it cannot be helped: the utmost extent you can go to is to make the tenant for life give security for the sum which may eventually be due" (c).

How the rule to be applied to leaseholds for lives.

7. There occurs, also, this further difficulty, viz. how to apply the principle to the case of leaseholds for lives. The new cestui que vie may die in the lifetime of the original cestui que vie, and then no actual benefit accrues either to the tenant for life or to the remainderman. If the tenant for life paid the fine, is the remainderman to contribute nothing, because he took no benefit? If the remainderman paid the fine, is the tenant for life to contribute nothing, because he can excuse himself under the same plea?

8. From the nature of leaseholds for lives it seems difficult to discover any other principle of adjustment than one of the following:—

First, That the tenant for life and the remainderman should contribute according to their chance of benefit at the time of the renewal, in which case the proportions would be settled thus:—The chance of benefit to the tenant for life is the value of the new life commencing from the death of the last surviving original cestui que vie, and determining on the death of the tenant for life. The chance of benefit to the remainderman is the value of the new life commencing on the death of the original cestuis que vie after the death of the tenant for life. In the proportion of these two values would be the respective contributions.

(b) Coppin v. Fernyhough, 2 B. C. C. 291.

(c) See White v. White, 9 Ves. 558, 559; Earl of Shaftesbury v. Duke of Marlborough, 2 M. & K. 122.

Secondly, That the remainderman's proportion should be regulated by the actual benefit derived. Thus, if the new cestui que vie die in the lifetime of any of the original cestuis que vie, or of the tenant for life, the remainderman takes no benefit and has nothing to pay. In this case the tenant for life is the loser. Should the new cestui que vie survive the original cestuis que vie and also the tenant for life, the value of the new life should be taken at the tenant for life's death, and that interest be paid for by the remainderman. It might happen that the original cestuis que vie and the tenant for life might die soon after the renewal, and then the estimated value of the new life would be greater than the whole fine; and in such a case the tenant for life would be a gainer. Thus the tenant for life might sometimes be a gainer, sometimes a loser: the remainderman would never either gain or lose, but would pay the exact value of the interest which he actually took (a).

Thirdly, That, vice versâ, the tenant for life's proportion should be regulated by the actual benefit derived, and that the contingent loss or gain, as the case might be, should fall upon the corpus of the property, that is, upon the remainderman.

9. In Reeves v. Creswick (b), where leaseholds for lives were devised to trustees upon trust for A. for life, with remainder to her children, and a bill was filed by the trustees for the purpose of having the expenses of renewal raised, the following scheme, which had been approved by the Master, was directed to be carried into effect. The period of enjoyment of the property by the tenant for life under each of the old leases being the joint duration of her own life and that of the then surviving cestui que vie named in such lease, and the period of her enjoyment of the property under each corresponding renewed lease being in like manner the joint duration of her life, and those of the new cestuis que vie, or the longest liver of them, the difference between the values of the estates for these two periods gave the benefit derived by the tenant for life from the renewals in question, and the residue of the increased value of the property expressed the benefit derived from the renewals by the remainderman. Calculations were accordingly made by the actuary of an insurance office, upon the above principles, of the benefit derived by the respective parties from the renewal of each lease, and the fines and expenses of renewal being divided in the proportions so ascertained, the total amount, which thereupon appeared to fall to the share of the tenant for life, was directed to be insured upon her own life for the purpose of providing, upon her decease, for the payment of a corresponding part of the principal of the mortgage debt to be raised upon the property. The policy of insurance was ordered to be assigned to the mortgagee, and directions were given for paying the premiums on the policy, and for keeping down the interest on the entire mortgage debt out of the annual rents and profits of the estates. The only observation that occurs upon the propriety of this arrangement is, whether the tenant for life ought to have been directed to keep down the interest of the entire mortgage debt out of the annual rents as between her and the remainderman, or only of that part of the principal which fell to the share of the tenant for life. It will be seen also from this statement, that the Court made an apportionment according to the speculative benefit, a course which the Court has in other cases disclaimed, except for the purpose of raising the fine in præsenti without prejudice to the ultimate apportionment on the death of the tenant for life, when the relative benefits derived can be ascertained. It was perhaps understood, though it does not so appear from the report, that the decree was to be without prejudice to an ultimate adjustment.

Jones v. Jones.

In Jones v. Jones (a), before Vice-Chancellor Wigram, involving leaseholds for lives as well as leaseholds for years, and where the fines were to be raised out of the rents or by mortgage, or by such other means as should be advisable, the mode of raising and ultimately apportioning the fines was fully considered, and the importance of the subject may justify a somewhat lengthened extract from the judgment. "The rule," said the Vice-Chancellor, "is, that the parties are to pay in proportion to their enjoyment, by which I understand their actual enjoyment to be meant, and not an extent of enjoyment to be determined by mere speculation, or by a calculation of probabilities, and the question is, how that apportionment is to be effected. If the tenant for life is willing to take upon himself to renew, he will enjoy the estate during his own life, and when the actual period of his enjoyment is ascertained, his estate will have a lien upon the residue of the term for any overpayment which may have been made. The case is one of much greater difficulty where the renewal is made by the remainderman, or (which as to this difficulty is the same thing) where the trustee is to raise the money and charge it on the corpus. In that case, unless some course be taken to protect the interest of the remainderman, the tenant for life may enjoy the estate during his whole life without bearing any greater charge than the interest on the debt created by the renewal, and he may leave no assets to pay his proportion of the principal money. That inconvenience may perhaps be avoided by requiring the tenant for life to give security, but there is a practical difficulty in determining for what sum the tenant for life is to give security. If he gives security for the whole amount of the fine, because by possibility he may enjoy the whole benefit resulting from the renewal, the difficulty is got over; but the tenant for life may not be able to give security for the whole although he might for a part, and how is the Court in such a case to deal with the interests of the parties? I do not, however, think that the difficulty to which I have adverted is insuperable. The tenant for life may in the first instance be required to give security for an amount calculated upon the assumption that his life will last during a portion of the renewed lease. If he should die within the time during which it was assumed that his life would last, the security would of course be more than sufficient to satisfy his proportion of the fine, and it would be void for the excess. If he outlived that time he might, if necessary, be called upon to give a further security to cover the additional proportion then to be attributed to him. It appears to me proper to declare that each party is to bear the burthen of the renewal in the proportion of his actual enjoyment of the estate. There will be a direction for the tenant for life to keep down the interest, and a reference to ascertain what proportion of the fine was properly payable by him. This inquiry is necessarily by anticipation. There will then be a reference to approve of a security, and these directions must be followed by a declaration that the reference and security are to be without prejudice to the question whether the tenant for life may or may not be liable to pay less or more than the sum for which the security is given." The doctrines enunciated in this case have been since approved as sound, and the tenant for life, where the fine has been paid out of the trust fund, has been ordered to give security for his contribution to the fine in proportion to the benefit which he should ultimately derive from the new life (a).

It must be observed, however, that Jones v. Jones leaves untouched the case which creates the greatest difficulty, viz., where by the death of the new cestui que vie in the lifetime of the tenant for life no benefit from the renewal accrues either to the tenant for life or to the remainderman. Nor does it appear to have been distinctly perceived by the Court that the renewal of leaseholds for lives being essentially matter of speculation, it is impossible to regulate the contribution of either tenant for life or remainderman according to the value of his actual enjoyment, without e converso making the remainderman or the tenant for life take upon himself the risk of the renewal proving profitable or unprofitable in its ultimate results; and further, that in order to make each party bear the burden of the renewal in the proportion of his actual enjoyment, it would be necessary to await the death not merely of the tenant for life but also of the cestuis que vie, a course which would be extremely inconvenient, and, it is conceived, contrary to the general practice of the Court.

In Harris v. Harris (b), copyholds held for three lives were settled on A. for life with remainders over, and two of the cestuis que vie having died, A. put in two new lives at his own expense. A. died in the lifetime of the original cestui que vie, so that A. in event had no benefit from the renewal, and the whole fine was ordered to be repaid to A.'s personal representative. But it might happen that the two new lives would also die in the lifetime of the original cestuis que vie, and then the remaindermen also would have no benefit from the renewal. It would seem, therefore, that the Court must have assumed that the speculative gain or loss was to fall on the remainderman.

Tenant for life regarded as a trustee.

10. Where the legal estate of renewable leaseholds is devised without the interposition of a trustee, but the testator at the same time directs, either expressly or by implication, that the leases shall be renewed, the tenant for life is then himself a trustee (c), and as such is compellable to apply for renewals (d), but ought before applying for a renewal to consult the remainderman (e).

(a) Hudleston v. Whelpdale, 9 Hare, 775.

(b) Harris v. Harris (No. 3), 32 Beav. 333.

(c) White v. White, 5 Ves. 555.

(d) Lock v. Lock, 2 Vern. 666; and see White v. White, 4 Ves. 24.

(e) White v. White, 5 Ves. 555. [The tenant for life on renewal ought not to put in his own life; Hudleston v. Whelpdale, 9 Ha. 775, 788, distinguishing White v. White, 9 Ves. 554, 561, as having been decided upon the special terms of the will.]

Tenant for life refusing to renew.

11. It has been said, that if from the threats or acts of the tenant for life there appears the intention of suffering the lease to expire, the Court would appoint a receiver of the estate to provide a fund for the renewal (a); and that if the tenant for life has already allowed the period for renewal to pass, the rents and profits may be impounded for either procuring a renewal (b), or finding the remainderman a compensation (c). But no suit for damages can be effectually prosecuted before the tenant for life's decease; for so long as it remains uncertain how much of the renewed term will survive to the remainderman, the amount of the injury done to him cannot be ascertained (d). It follows that the mere forbearance of the remainderman to bring a suit during the continuance of the life estate cannot be construed into laches or acquiescence (e).

Admission fines in respect of copyholds.

12. The fines, fees and expenses of the admission of new trustees to copyholds must be borne by the tenant for life and remaindermen in proportion to their respective interests, according to the principles which regulate the renewal of leaseholds. Thus a testator devises copyholds to A. and his heirs upon trust for B. for life, with remainder to C. in fee. A. pays a fine on his admission and dies. His heir is admitted and pays a fine and dies, and his heir again is admitted and pays a fine. Thus the fine for the admission of the trustee is a kind of purchase-money for an estate for life of that trustee. The burthen must be borne by the cestuis que trust of the estate, and they contribute to the fines in proportion to their actual enjoyment, as in the case of leaseholds (f). These observations are on the assumption that the will or settlement contains no express directions how the fines are to be raised.

CHAPTER XVI.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES TO PRESERVE CONTINGENT REMAINDERS.

1. TRUSTS of this description are at present of much less frequent occurrence than they were formerly, and the reason is easily explained.

Object of the settlement under the old law, liable to be defeated.

2. As the law stood before the recent Acts, which will be noticed presently, the objects of a strict settlement (where there was no limitation to trustees to preserve contingent remainders), were liable to be defeated in the two following ways:—

In the first place, as a contingent remainder was formerly extinguishable by the surrender or merger of the particular estate in the inheritance (a), if lands were limited to A. for life with remainder to his unborn children, with remainder to B.; A. might surrender his life estate to B., or B. might release to A., or A. and B. might join in a conveyance of the fee simple to C., and in each case the contingent remainder was squeezed out, and if issue were afterwards born, they had no remedy at law or in equity.

Again, the intention of the settlor was that the estate should remain in the family as long as the law permitted, and that on the death of the tenant for life it should devolve on the person who happened at the time to stand next in the series of limitations, but in fact when the eldest son attained twenty-one he was enabled, with the concurrence of his father in making a tenant to the præcipe, to bar all the subsequent remainders; and thus, on the majority of the eldest son, the estate became the absolute property of the father and son, and the interests of those in remainder were sacrificed, except so far as the father and son might choose to give them effect.

3. To obviate these results settlements were usually penned in one of the two following modes: either, First, The legal estate was limited to the use of the parent for 99 years if he should so long live, with remainder to the use of trustees and their heirs during the life of the parent upon trust to preserve the contingent limitations, and on his death to other uses in remainder; or to the use of trustees and their heirs during the life of the parent in trust for him, and on his death to other uses in remainder; or, Secondly, The settlement was to the use of the parent for life, with remainder to trustees and their heirs during the life of the parent upon trust to preserve the contingent remainders, and on his death to other uses in remainder.

Case of the legal estate for life in the trustee.

4. In the first form of settlement the object in view, by vesting the freehold in the trustees, was to preserve the contingent limitations from being destroyed by the surrender or merger of the particular estate, which would have been practicable had the freehold been limited to the parent himself, and also to prevent the barring of the entail and the alienation of the estate for purposes not authorised by the spirit of settlement.

Case of the legal estate in the tenant for life.

5. In the second form it was the duty of the trustees as before to preserve the contingent limitations, but as the freehold in possession was vested in the parent the trustees had no power to prevent a recovery by the father and son as soon as the latter came of age, but if the tenant for life committed a forfeiture (as by feoffment in fee in order to defeat the contingent remainders), it was then the duty of the trustees to enter and so vest the freehold in possession in themselves, and it was then their further duty, as in the first form, though the settlor himself might not have contemplated such a purpose, not to concur in putting an end to the settlement, except where such interference was prudent and proper (a).

Effect of the Fines and Recoveries Act upon trusts to preserve contingent remainders.

6. The law upon the duties of trustees to preserve contingent remainders has in later times undergone great alteration.

By the 15th section of the Fines and Recoveries Act (b) it is declared, that every tenant in tail, whether in possession, remainder, contingency, or otherwise, shall have power to dispose of the lands entailed for an estate in fee simple absolute; but by the 40th and two following sections, the disposition must be by deed inrolled, and must be made with the consent of the protector of the settlement.

Operation of the old law.

7. Under the old law the key of the settlement was in the hands of the person who was the owner of the freehold in possession; but now, by the 32nd section of the Act, any settlor entailing lands may appoint one or more persons in esse, not exceeding three and not being aliens, to be protector or protectors of the settlement during the period therein specified, and may perpetuate the protectorship by means of a power of appointment of new protectors (a). If the settlor has not taken advantage of this permission, then, by the 22nd section, if there be subsisting under the settlement any estate for years determinable on the dropping of a life or lives, or any greater estate (not being an estate for years) prior to the estate tail, the owner of such prior estate, or of the first of such prior estates if more than one, or the person who would have been owner had he not disposed of his interest, is constituted the protector of the settlement. But, by the 27th section, no dowress, bare trustee, heir, executor, or administrator shall be protector. However, by the 31st section, it is enacted, that, "where, under a settlement made before the passing of the Act, the person who under the old law should have made the tenant to the præcipe, shall be a bare trustee, such trustee during the continuance of the estate conferring the right to make the tenant to the præcipe shall be the protector;" but, by the 36th section, the protector of a settlement shall not be deemed to be a trustee in respect of his power of consent, and a Court of equity shall not control or interfere to restrain the exercise of his power of consent, nor treat his giving his consent as a breach of trust.

(a) The duties of trustees to preserve contingent remainders with reference to the old law have been omitted in this edition, but will be found in the early editions.

(b) 3 & 4 Will. 4. c. 74.

Operation of the new law.

8. Under the provisions, therefore, of this Act, as regards settlements made since the passing of the Act, a bare trustee cannot be protector in any case (b). As regards settlements made before the passing of the Act, though the trustee may become protector by the operation of the 31st section, he is not accountable in a Court of equity for the exercise of his discretion. But a bare trustee who is protector under that section can insist on retaining the legal estate only so long as the purposes of the trusts exist, that is, so long as according to the rules of a Court of equity he is required to be a trustee. Therefore, where there

[(a) Where a testatrix appointed three persons protectors, and made provisions for the appointment of other persons to be protectors in case they should die, and the protectors all died but no new protectors were appointed in their place, it was held by V. C. Malins that the tenant for life was the protector. Clarke v. Chamberlin, 16 Ch. D. 176.]

was a devise of lands to trustees upon trust for testator's daughter during her life, for her separate use, without power of anticipation, with remainder to the use of her children as tenants in common in tail with remainders over, it was held that the testator's daughter, having become discoverte and being sui juris, could compel a conveyance by the trustees of the legal estate vested in them during her life (a).

7 & 8 Vict. c. 76.

9. By 7 & 8 Vict. c. 76, s. 8, it was declared that no estate should be created by way of contingent remainder; but that every estate which before that time would have taken effect as a contingent remainder, should take effect as an executory devise, or if in a deed, as an estate having the same properties as an executory devise, and that contingent remainders already created should not be defeated by the destruction or merger of the preceding estate.

8 & 9 Vict. c. 106.

10. But this sweeping provision was repealed by 8 & 9 Vict. c. 106, s. 1; and in lieu thereof it was enacted (by s. 8), that a contingent remainder should be deemed capable of taking effect, notwithstanding the determination by forfeiture, surrender, or merger of any preceding estate of freehold, in the same manner in all respects as if such determination had not happened.

Remarks upon the limitation to preserve contingent remainders.

11. In consequence of this enactment it is now unnecessary to make use of any machinery for preserving contingent remainders from destruction by the forfeiture, surrender, or merger of the preceding estate; and therefore, if an estate be limited to the use of A. for life, with remainder to his unborn children, the contingent limitations cannot be defeated. But limitations to trustees, during the lives of the tenants for life, are still frequently introduced in settlements for the purpose of creating a check upon the tenants for life, as, in cases of waste by the tenants for life, it would be the duty of the trustees to interfere as protectors of the remaindermen's interest (b).

Contingent remainders may still be defeated by determination of life estate in due course.

12. Contingent remainders however created before the recent Act (c) still remain liable to be defeated, should the preceding life estate determine, in due course, before they become vested, and the limitation of an estate pur autre vie adequate to support the contingent remainders is accordingly in many cases a matter of considerable importance. Thus if an estate be limited to A. for life, with remainder to the unborn children of B., or to the children of B. who should attain 21, here the contingent remainders, if B. survives A., would require support by a limitation of the estate to trustees after the death of A. until the children of B. should come into existence, in the one case, or until a child should attain 21 in the other.

(a) Buttanshaw v. Martin, Johns. 89, 93.

(b) Perrot v. Perrot, 3 Atk. 94, per Lord Hardwicke; Garth v. Cotton, 1 Ves. sen. 555, per eundem.

40 & 41 Vict. c. 33.

[But now by the recent Act (a) every contingent remainder created by any instrument executed after the passing of the Act (2 August, 1877), or by any will or codicil revived or republished by any will or codicil executed after that date, which would have been valid as a springing or shifting use or executory devise, or other limitation, had it not had a sufficient estate to support it as a contingent remainder, is, in the event of the particular estate determining before the contingent remainder vests, to take effect as if it were a springing or shifting use, or executory devise or other executory limitation.

The effect of this enactment is to render contingent remainders independent of the determination of the particular estate in all cases in which the limitation would have been valid had it been a springing or shifting use, or an executory devise or other limitation; but where the limitation would have been void, as for instance for remoteness, had it been a springing or shifting use or an executory devise or other limitation, the remainder will still be liable to be defeated by the determination of the particular estate before it has become vested.

Legal limitations not construed as equitable in order to protect contingent remainders.

13. If an estate be devised to trustees and their heirs to certain uses, showing a clear intention on the part of the testator to create a succession of legal limitations, the Court will not hold the legal estate to be in the trustees merely because a different construction would leave the contingent remainders created by the devise unprotected by any particular estate (b).]

[(a) 40 & 41 Vict. c. 33.]

D. 790; but an equitable limitation created by a will or settlement, will not be deprived of protection by reason of its being converted into a legal limitation upon a reconveyance by a mortgagee to the uses of the will or settlement, Re Freme, W. N. 1891, p. 113.]

CHAPTER XVII.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR RAISING PORTIONS.

THE subject of portions is of so extensive a character, that to exhaust it would require a treatise by itself. All that can be attempted in a single chapter is a brief summary of the law upon the points of most usual occurrence in practice.

Who are portionists.

We propose in the first section to inform trustees who are their cestuis que trust, or in other words who are to be regarded as portionists—a question that appears simple enough in itself, and yet involves a multitude of cases which can only be reconciled by the most refined distinctions. The principal struggle has been where and under what circumstances an eldest son is to be included amongst or excluded from the designated class. But further, the question who are portionists, involves the inquiry when or at what time portions, which are regulated by peculiar principles, are vested; and again, even if portions may have become vested, it remains to be asked whether they may not have become divested on the doctrines of ademption and satisfaction—doctrines which open a wide field of controversy, and are to some extent left still in an unsatisfactory state.

Amount to be raised.

In the second section we shall explain (and this may be compressed within much narrower bounds) what is the amount to be raised, both as regards the principal sum and interest, and also as to costs; [and in what cases maintenance will be allowed, even though the corpus be not vested.]

When to be raised.

In the third section we shall have to consider at what time the portions ought to be raised, and more particularly when portions are charged on reversionary interests, for then either the estate must suffer by raising the portions at a sacrifice in præsenti out of an interest to take effect in future, or else the portionists must be left destitute until the reversion falls into possession.

Mode of raising.

Lastly, in the fourth section we shall offer some practical remarks as to the best mode of raising the portions, as whether by sale or mortgage, or a fall of timber, or out of mines, or in what other manner.

SECTION I.

WHO ARE TO BE REGARDED AS PORTIONISTS.

UNDER this head we shall inquire: First. Who are meant by younger children where the estate charged is settled on an "eldest" child. Secondly. Who are meant by younger children where the estate charged is not settled on an "eldest" child. Thirdly. At what time the portions vest. Fourthly. Of ademption and satisfaction.

Settlement on eldest son.

First. Who are meant by younger children where the estate charged is settled on an "eldest" child.

1. "The Court in the case of portions," observed Sir G. Turner, "seems to have regarded rather the purpose than the words of the instrument. In some of the cases, indeed, the Court seems almost to have carried into effect the purpose of the instrument in opposition to the words, and although in the late cases more weight has been given to the terms of the instrument, there can be no doubt that in cases of this nature, very great attention must be given to the purpose of the instrument" (a).

General rule

2. In the first place, then, let us see in what cases an eldest child actually will be regarded as a younger child constructively, or (which is the same thing), in what cases a younger child will be deemed the eldest child.

"Every child," said Lord Hardwicke, "except the heir," (i.e. except the one who takes the estate) "is considered in equity as a younger, and eldership, not carrying the estate along with it, is considered not such an eldership as shall exclude," viz. from sharing in the portions provided for younger children. "It would be hard, that the right of eldership should be taken away, and yet not have the benefit of a younger child" (b).

Time of distribution.

3. If, therefore, before the period fixed for distribution of the portions, the estate shifts either by the original limitations, or by appointment under a power contained in the settlement, from the eldest child to a younger child, the younger child so taking the estate is treated as the eldest (a), and the eldest child losing the estate is deemed a younger child (b).

(a) Remnant v. Hood, 2 De G. F. & J. 413; approved by V. C. Wood, Davies v. Huguenin, 1 H. & M. 743.

Chadwick v. Doleman.

Thus, in the leading case of Chadwick v. Doleman (c), a father on his marriage settled an estate to the use of himself for life, with remainder (subject to a jointure) to the use of trustees upon trust, within six months after his decease, to raise 4000*l.* for younger children's portions as the father should appoint, or in default of appointment to be divided amongst the younger children, with remainder to the use of the first and other sons in tail. There were several children of the marriage, viz. Humphrey the eldest, and Thomas, John, Lewis, Ann, and Dorothy. By a deed, dated in 1686, the father appointed the 4,000*l.*, giving 2,600*l.* part thereof to Thomas the second son on the occasion of his marriage, and after this Humphrey the eldest son died in his father's lifetime without issue, and thereupon the father appointed the 2,600*l.* amongst his younger children other than Thomas. On the death of the father the estate devolved on the second son Thomas, and then the question arose whether the first or the second appointment was good, or in other words whether Thomas was entitled to the 2,600*l.* as well as the estate. The Lord Keeper said he admitted that Thomas at the time of the appointment was a person capable of taking, and was a younger child within the power, but that this was a defeasible appointment, not from any power of revoking, or upon the words of the appointment, but from the capacity of the person. He was capable of taking at the time of the appointment made, but that was sub modo and upon a tacit or implied condition, that he should not afterwards happen to become the eldest son and heir, so that he had as it were only a defeasible capacity. And

Ir. 363; (where, upon the construction of the settlement, two daughters, there being no son, were held not to fall within the description of "children other than and besides an eldest or only son"); Reid v. Hoare, 26 Ch. D. 363;] Jermyn v. Fellows, For. 93, was a case of special circumstances. In Leake v. Leake, 10 Ves. 477, the doctrine of Chadwick v. Doleman, 2 Vern. 528, would seem to have been applicable, though it was not applied. The question was not discussed.

(b) Duke v. Doidge, 2 Ves. sen. 203; note.

it was, therefore, adjudged that Thomas, who took the estate, was not entitled to the 2,600*l.*

Eldest son taking place of younger son.

4. In this case the second son by succeeding to the estate and so becoming the eldest was deprived of any share in the portions for younger children, and no claim appears to have been put forward on behalf of Humphrey the eldest son to stand in the place of a younger son. But it has since been settled that under such circumstances the eldest son, even though he died in his father's lifetime, and sustained up to his own decease the character of eldest son, but never eventually came into possession of the estate, is entitled to be treated as a younger son, and to share with the other portionists. Thus in Davies v. Huguenin (a), the estate was settled on J. Davies and his wife successively for life, remainder to the children as he should appoint, and subject as aforesaid to the use of a trustee for 500 years for raising portions for younger children; remainder to the first and other sons in tail. J. Davies had two sons, William the elder, and John Stanley the younger. William attained twenty-one and died in his father's lifetime, [and it was held that his personal representative thereupon became entitled to a portion, but subject to the exercise of the power of appointment.] Again, in Ellison v. Thomas (b), the eldest son of R. E. C. was not tenant in tail but tenant for life only, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail; and yet it was held that the personal representative of this eldest son who died without issue male before coming into possession of the estate, was entitled to share in the portions provided for the younger children of R. E. C.

[If the estate is sold for payment of charges, and it is insufficient for payment of all the charges, so that the eldest son gets nothing under the limitation to him, he must still be treated as an eldest child taking the estate subject to the charges, and is not entitled to share in the portions provided for the younger children (c).]

Eldest daughter a younger child.

5. If an estate be settled on the first and other sons with a provision for younger children, an eldest daughter, though the firstborn, is regarded as a younger child (d). So, if an estate be settled on the first and other sons of A. with remainder to B., and there is a trust for raising portions for A.'s younger children, and A. has two daughters only, so that the estate shifts over to B., both the daughters of A. are younger children, and entitled to share the portions between them (a).

Eldest son may be a younger son.

6. The rule that a younger son who at the time of distribution takes the estate and so becomes the eldest son, is excluded from sharing in the portions, must be qualified by the condition that he takes the estate under the same settlement, or under some settlement incorporated into the portions' settlement, for otherwise he retains his rights as a younger son. Thus an estate was settled to the use of A. for life, with remainder (subject to A.'s wife's annuity) to the use of his first and other sons in tail, with a trust for raising portions on the death of the wife for younger children, to be vested at twenty-one or marriage. A. had two sons, Henry the eldest, and George, and after the death of A. in 1842, but during the lifetime of A.'s widow, and therefore before the portions were raisable, Henry barred the entail and devised the estate to his brother George; and it was held that on the death of A.'s widow in 1857, when the portions became raisable, George was entitled to share in the portions, though he was then the eldest son and was the owner of the estate, because he derived his title to it, not as eldest son under the settlement, but as devisee of his brother (b).

Eldest son parting with the estate.

7. But if at the time of distribution the eldest son has not the estate, but except for his own act (as in joining with his father in defeating the entail and resettling the property) he would have had the estate, he is not allowed to plead the want of the estate and to claim as a portionist (c).

Whether the rule applies only to parents or persons loco parentis.

8. The doctrine of portions as laid down in Chadwick v. Doleman has been said to apply only where the settlor is the parent or stands loco parentis; but if this proposition were accepted literally, then if a testator devised an estate to A. a perfect stranger for life, with remainder to his first and other sons in tail, and created a term in the same estate for raising portions for the younger children of A., the second son of A., though, by the death of his elder brother without issue in A.'s lifetime, he succeeded to the estate, would also be entitled to share in the portions. Upon examination of the several authorities it will be found that at the most there are only a few dicta in support of the proposition suggested (a). Lord Hardwicke on the other

(a) Thus, in Hall v. Hewer, Amb. 203, a testator devised his real estate to John Hewer for life, remainder to John's first and other sons in tail, remainder to his daughters in tail, remainder to Humphrey, second son of T. Hall, in fee. And the testator charged his estate with 6000*l.* in trust for the younger children of T. Hall, in case J. Hewer died without leaving issue. James, the eldest son of T. Hall, died in the lifetime of J. Hewer, so that on the death of the latter, Humphrey was the eldest son of T. Hall. It was held upon the construction of the will, that the 6000*l.* was contingent until the death of J. Hewer, and then vested in such persons as were then the younger children of T. Hall, and as Humphrey was then the eldest he took nothing. This was the ground of the decision, and therefore the question did not arise whether, if Humphrey had previously acquired a vested interest, he could have lost it by becoming the eldest son. Under no circumstances, however, could he have become disentitled, for there was no shifting of the estate, which had never been given to James the eldest son, but to Humphrey himself. The testator meant the estate and the portion to go together. The Court observed, "There was no case where the Court had considered a younger child as an eldest, but between parent and children, or those who stood in loco parentis." But this was merely a dictum.

In Matthews v. Paul, 3 Sw. 328 (and see Adams v. Adams, 25 Beav. 652; Adams v. Robarts, Ib. 658), a testatrix bequeathed her Imperial annuities and five per cent. stock in trust, upon the termination of the Imperial annuities (which event occurred in May, 1819) for the children of her daughter Mary Paul, except an eldest son. Mary Paul had at the testatrix's death five children, viz. two sons, John and Walter, and three daughters. John died before the termination of the annuities, so that on the occurrence of the latter event Walter was the eldest son, and the question was, whether he was to share in the portions, and it was ruled that he was not, for that as the time of distribution was the period for ascertaining who were to be included in the class, it must equally be the period for ascertaining who were to be excluded. Here there was no real estate in settlement at all, and therefore the principle of Chadwick v. Doleman did not come into question. The Court, however, during the argument, observed, "The cases where this rule has been adopted have arisen on gifts by parents or persons in loco parentis. In general the estate passing to the eldest son has been in the power of the persons making the provision for the younger children, and the same instrument has comprised the estate and the provision. Has the rule ever been applied to portions given by a stranger, who merely contemplated the chance of property descending to the eldest son, as representative of the family?" [And see Re Theed's Settlement, 3 K. & J. 375, 378, where Wood, V.C., commenting on Matthews v. Paul, said that the key to the whole of that judgment was "that, in gifts to classes the period of vesting was to be taken both for the purpose of ascertaining the class and also for the purpose of exclusion."]

In Lincoln v. Pelham, 10 Ves. 166, (and see Bowles v. Bowles, Ib. 177) the circumstances were somewhat similar. Lady Pelham gave a residuary fund in trust for Frances Pelham for life, and after her death for the younger children of the testatrix's late daughter, Catherine, Duchess of Newcastle. At the date of the will there were three children living of Catherine, viz. Lord Lincoln, Thomas, and John. Lord Lincoln died in the testatrix's lifetime, and Thomas contended that as he was a younger child at the date of the will, though not at the death of the testatrix, he was entitled to a share. Lord Eldon disallowed the claim, and considered that the general description of younger children was not equivalent to naming the younger children living at the date of the will, but meant younger children for the time being, and added, that "whatever was the principle as to parents or persons in loco parentis, it had no application here, for though the grandmother was executing a purpose, which as to this kind of doctrine might be considered parental (the purpose of providing for the younger branches, of other persons certainly, but in a sense her family), yet she thought that her daughters were sufficiently provided for, so as to make it unnecessary to consider them objects of her care," 10 Ves. 174. Here, again, there was no dispute as to the effect of the shifting of any estate, but it was simply a question of construction, who were the persons meant by the description of younger children.

In Scarisbrick v. Lord Skelmersdale, 4 Y. & C. 116, Justice Maule said, "It is to be observed that it is only in cases of provision made by parents or persons standing loco parentis, that courts of equity give this forced construction to the word 'younger.' In cases of gifts by strangers courts of equity, as well as courts of law, construe the word according to its literal import, as laid down by Lord Hardwicke in Hall v. Hewer. The distinction is founded on the consideration, that in the one case the party giving or settling is regarded as doing an act which he was under a moral, though not a legal obligation to perform, whereas in the case of a gift by a mere stranger, no such obligation exists," &c.

In Sandeman v. Mackenzie, 1 J. & H. 613, Mrs. Chisholm, a widow with three children (Alexander, the eldest —who was in possession of the Chisholm estates, subject to his mother's jointure—Duncan, and Jemima) married Sir Thomas Ramsay, and by the settlement made on the marriage, Sir T. Ramsay settled 10,000*l.* upon himself and wife successively for life, with remainder to the then present children of Mrs. Chisholm (except Alexander) equally at twenty-one; and if none of such younger children of Mrs. Chisholm should attain twenty-one, then in trust for Alexander. Sir T. Ramsay died in 1830, and Lady Ramsay in 1859; Alexander died in his mother's lifetime in 1838, and therefore Duncan came into possession of the Chisholm estates. All the three children attained twenty-one. The question was whether Duncan, though he had succeeded to the Chisholm estates, was entitled to share in the 10,000*l.* portions, and it was held that he was entitled, and Sir W. P. Wood in delivering judgment, made some important observations. "I should have been glad," he said, "if the doctrine had been confined to the class of cases in which it originated, where a settlor by marriage settlement makes provision for his family generally, limiting the estate to the eldest son in tail, giving the usual powers for jointures and portions (though, even when this is not done, the son might still make any provision he pleased on attaining his majority), and then going on to charge the settled estate in favour of younger children. In such cases it is reasonable enough to regard the limitations for younger children as intended for the benefit not merely of those who happened to be younger children at the time of vesting, but of those who might fill that character when the fund should come into possession. A settlor under such circumstances may fairly be presumed to provide for the whole of his family, and younger children would in such an instrument naturally be taken to mean those who should not otherwise be provided for. But the moment you extend the doctrine to other cases where the provision for younger children is made by some person in loco parentis, not by marriage settlement, but by some independent deed, you have an extremely different case to deal with. When the rule is laid down thus broadly, it includes cases where the effect of it may be to render it impossible for a second son, marrying in his father's lifetime, to make any jointure or settlement, except on a contingency. Still the cases, to whatever extent they may go, have not been carried beyond those where the donor is, if not a parent, at any rate in loco parentis. No authority goes so far as to apply the rule to a person, not a relative of those for whom provision is estate, appointed portions to her younger grandchildren (a); but he also applied it where the settlor was an uncle, and this not because he considered the uncle as standing loco parentis, but on general principles (b). "Where," he said, "a provision is made by a father either by will or settlement for younger children, an elder unprovided for shall be deemed a younger, and the ground is that every branch of the family should be provided for, the Court not considering the words elder or younger. The question then is, whether there exists any difference where the settlement is made by a father's brother to a collateral relation, a nephew," &c., and he laid it down broadly that "every child except the heir is considered a younger, and that eldership which does not carry the estate along with it is not such an eldership as will exclude from sharing in the portions." From this judgment may be inferred the principle that where the settlor (whether a parent, or standing in loco parentis, or a stranger) settles an estate upon a particular family, and means to provide for all the family by limiting the estate to one and portions to the others, there no one of them shall under the same settlement take the estate and a portion also, but in such cases the Court will, if necessary, disregard the strictly literal meaning of the words eldest and younger, and carry out the substantial intention.

General rule.

9. This point however remains to be settled, and the only general rule to be laid down at present is that where the settlor is the parent or stands loco parentis, and portions are provided for younger children, and the estate upon which the portions are charged devolves (before the time for distribution of the portions) on one of the children, under the same settlement or under a settlement incorporated into it (c), there the words "eldest child" and "younger children" are capable of what has been called "a prodigious latitude of construction," viz., an eldest may be treated as a younger, and a younger as an eldest; but that where portions are provided for younger children, and the estate either does not made, and not having any interest in the family estate. But here Sir Thomas Ramsay had nothing to do with the family or the estate." The substantial ground for the Court's decision in this case was that the younger child (who was declared entitled to the portions though he also took the estate) did not take the estate by any title derived from the persons who created the portions. And see Cooper v. Cooper, 8 L. R. Ch. App. 813.

(a) Lord Teynham v. Webb, 2 Ves. sen. 198; as to a grandfather standing loco parentis, see Farrer v. Barker, 9 Hare, 737; Swallow v. Binns, 1 K. & J. 147; [Domville v. Winnington, 26 Ch. D. 382, 387.]

devolve before the time for distribution of the portions on any of the children, or does not so devolve under the settlement creating the charge or a settlement incorporated in it by recital or otherwise, there the words "eldest child" and "younger children" receive their ordinary and natural interpretation.

[10. The rule, however, being only a rule of construction and not an absolute rule of law, must give way to the expressed language of the will or settlement. Thus where a testator, having devised his real estate on trusts for his wife for life, and then for his sons successively in strict settlement, gave a legacy (which was charged on the real estate, if his personalty was insufficient) equally amongst his "younger children," and then proceeded to give the names of all his children other than the eldest son, with a direction that the share of each of his "younger children" should be absolutely vested at twenty-one, whether the preceding trusts should be determined or not, it was held that a younger son, who attained twenty-one in the lifetime of the widow, and, on her death, became entitled under the settlement of the real estate, by reason of the deaths of his elder brothers without issue male, was entitled to share in the legacy (a).] [Exception.]

Secondly. Who are meant by younger children where the estate charged is not settled on an "eldest" son.

1. We now proceed to the cases where a settlor provides portions for younger children generally, without the ingredient that one is to take the estate and the other to have the charge. Here the ordinary rules of construction apply, and "eldest" is taken to mean the eldest actually, and "younger" to mean the younger actually (b), and the time for ascertaining who is eldest and who are younger is not the period of distribution but the period of vesting. Where no one is made an eldest son.

Thus in Adams v. Adams (c) Sir W. Curtis, the father of Emma Adams, bequeathed 6,000*l.* to trustees in trust for Emma Adams for life, and after her decease "in trust for the children born or to be born of Emma Adams, who not being an eldest or only son for the time being," should as to sons attain twenty-one, or as to daughters attain twenty-one or marry, in equal shares. Emma Adams died in 1857, and there were eight children. Henry William the eldest attained the age of twenty-one in 1826, and died in 1854, in the lifetime of his mother. George the second son attained twenty-one in 1828, and at the death of his mother was the eldest son. The question was whether the words "eldest son" meant eldest at the time of the first portion vesting, or eldest at the time of its falling into possession; that is, whether George was or not entitled to a share. The M.R. adopted the principle laid down by Sir T. Plumer, viz., that there cannot be two periods, one for ascertaining who compose the class to take, and the other for ascertaining who are to be excluded (a); and that as George was not the eldest son when he attained twenty-one, he took a vested interest, and that the interest being once vested there was nothing to divest it, except to a limited extent by the attainment of vested interests by the other younger children.

Exceptions.

2. To the general rule that the eldest son in these cases is to be ascertained not at the time of distribution but at the time of vesting, there may be exceptions as in Livesey v. Livesey (b), with reference to which the M.R. observed, "a testator may say, 'I do not intend any child to take a share unless at the period of distribution he shall fulfil the condition of not being an eldest son.' In Livesey v. Livesey the class was to be ascertained when the youngest child attained twenty-one, and there was a direction that the son who was or should become an eldest son should not take anything under the devise or bequest, and consequently the person who filled the character of eldest son at that period could not take. Unless the testator has said, 'I do not intend a person to take any interest who at the time of distribution fills the character of eldest son,' I think the character of eldest son is to be ascertained when the interest becomes vested" (c).

Thirdly. At what time the portions vest.

General rule as to vesting.

1. In every well-drawn settlement, whether by deed or will, the period of vesting is clearly expressed upon the face of the instrument itself, and the usual period is as to sons at twenty-one, and as to daughters at twenty-one or marriage, with a declaration that the portions are not to be payable until after the death of the tenants for life, unless with the consent of the tenants for life. It often happens, however, that the language of the instrument is contradictory or inconsistent, or in some way ambiguous, and, in order not to defeat the probable intention, a peculiar and important canon of construction has been established; and it is this—Where a parent or a person standing loco parentis provides portions for children, the strong presumption is that he means to provide portions for all such children as may live to require it, i.e. for sons who attain twenty-one, and daughters who attain twenty-one or marry. If, therefore, the language of the instrument be uncertain (a) but is capable of the construction, that sons at twenty-one, and daughters at twenty-one or marriage, shall take a vested interest, the Court will so decide it by force of the presumption.

(a) Matthews v. Paul, 3 Sw. 328.
(c) 25 Beav. 656.

Thus, in Howgrave v. Cartier (b) a fund was vested in trustees upon trust for Peter for life, subject to 200*l.* pin-money to Elizabeth his intended wife, and if Elizabeth should die before Peter, "without leaving any child or children, or leaving such they should all die under twenty-one," then to pay any sum not exceeding 3,000*l.* as Elizabeth should appoint. But in case Elizabeth survived Peter then in trust for Elizabeth for life, and after the decease of the survivor in case there should happen to be any child or children of their two bodies living, who should attain twenty-one, then in trust for such child or children attaining twenty-one as Elizabeth should appoint, or in default as Peter should appoint, and in default among such children equally. Peter died leaving Elizabeth his widow and two children, John and Mary. Elizabeth appointed the fund between John and Mary, and then John having attained twenty-one died in the lifetime of his mother, and then Elizabeth died leaving Mary her only child. The question was whether Mary, as the only child who survived her mother, was not absolutely entitled to the whole fund, to the exclusion of John who had died in her lifetime. Sir W. Grant observed, "If the settlement clearly and unequivocally makes the right of a child to a provision depend upon its surviving both or either of the parents, a Court of Equity has no authority to control that disposition. If the settlement is incorrectly or ambiguously expressed, if it contains conflicting and contradictory clauses, so as to leave in a degree uncertain the period at which, or the contingency upon which, the shares are to vest, the Court leans strongly towards the construction which gives a vested interest to the child, when that child stands in need of a provision, usually as to sons at the age of twenty-one, and as to daughters at that age or marriage." And after commenting upon the various clauses contained in the settlement he came to the conclusion that John was entitled to the share appointed to him.

[(a) The "rule is only to be applied as a guide in construing an expression which is in itself ambiguous, or which the Court sees not to be framed in accordance with the intention of the settlor or testator as shewn by other parts of the instrument." Per Cotton, L.J., In re Hamlet, 39 Ch. Div. 426, 433.]

So in Swallow v. Binns (a), Nathaniel Binns made a voluntary settlement by which a trust fund was limited to himself for life, with remainder to his son George Binns for life, and after his decease in trust "for all and every of the children of the said George Binns, which might be living at the time of his decease," to be equally divided, and the shares of sons to vest at twenty-one and of daughters at twenty-one or marriage. Had the settlement stopped there those children only who survived George would have taken, but then followed other inconsistent limitations, namely, If any child being a son died under twenty-one, or being a daughter died under twenty-one unmarried, the share of such child was to survive to the other or others; "and in case all such of the children of the said George Binns as were sons should die under twenty-one, and all such of them as were daughters under that age without having been married," then the trust fund was to be held in trust for other persons. Nathaniel died in 1822 and George in 1851, having had six children, all of whom attained twenty-one, but two of them died in his lifetime, and the question was whether such two were entitled to share with the four who survived George. Vice-Chancellor Wood observed, "The rule applies not only to settlements but also to the case of a will, so far as it provides for children towards whom the testator places himself in loco parentis. In this case the grandfather is providing for his children and grand-children in such a manner, as throughout to place himself, with regard to the grandchildren, in the position of one who is performing a father's part, and providing what are expressly stated to be portions in one part of the settlement, and what, without that expression, would, I apprehend, be regarded as portions for his several grandchildren. The canon of construction to which I have referred may be thus stated: That whereas in the case of ordinary instruments an express estate thereby limited cannot be enlarged, except by necessary inference, yet, upon instruments of this description, there is an implication of law arising upon the instrument itself, subject of course to any expressions to the contrary, that it is the intention of any person who places himself in loco parentis to provide portions for children or grand-children, as the case may be, at the period when those portions will be wanted, namely, upon their attaining the age of twenty-one years, or (as is usually provided in the case of daughters) upon their attaining twenty-one or marriage; and that such portions shall then vest whether the children do or do not survive their parents. It is thought to be an unnatural supposition that the circumstance of such children or grandchildren predeceasing their parents, should have been contemplated as depriving them of the whole of the portion intended for their benefit. What the Court has said is this, that you do not require a necessary implication to arrive at the conclusion, that all children, who being sons attain twenty-one, or being daughters attain that age or marry, were intended to take, irrespectively of the question whether they survive their parents or not, and that if you find upon the face of the settlement a clause which renders it doubtful whether it was intended that all such children should take, or that those only should take who might survive their parents, the Court leans strongly in favour of the previous supposition, namely, that the probable intention of a person making a settlement would be in favour of the vesting at such fixed period, independently of the question of survivorship. On the other hand the rule is not one of arbitrary construction; the Court does not go out of its way by a forced construction to raise this implication; it must find an implication upon the natural and plain construction of the words in the settlement." And the Vice-Chancellor, applying these principles to the case before him, came to the conclusion that the two children who predeceased George their father were entitled to shares. The general principles laid down in the two foregoing examples have been approved and acted upon in numerous other cases (a); [and the rule applies as well to portions created by will as to those created by deed (b).]

Presumption overcome by the language.

2. But strong as the presumption is in favour of portions vesting in children at an age when they require it, yet if the language of the instrument be clear and unambiguous, that the vesting of portions in sons who attain twenty-one or in daughters who attain twenty-one or marry is to depend on some contingency, as

(a) Emperor v. Rolfe, 1 Ves. sen. 208; Powis v. Burdett, 9 Ves. 428; Remnant v. Hood, 27 Beav. 74; Perfect v. Curzon, 5 Mad. 442; Torres v. Franco, 1 R. & M. 649; Woodcock v. Dorset, 3 B. the event of their surviving their parents, the Court cannot contradict the written instrument (a).

Where portional fund has to be created.

3. A distinction must also be made between those cases where the portional fund exists or is to be raised at all events, so that the question relates only to the distribution of the fund, and those cases where the fund itself is to be called into existence upon a contingency, so that the latter contingency leavens all the portions and makes them all contingent.

Thus in Hotchkin v. Humfrey (b) a term of 500 years was created in trust that "in case the husband should leave one or more younger children that should be living at the decease of the survivor of the husband and wife," the trustees were to raise portions for "such younger children," the same to be paid to daughters at the age of eighteen or marriage, and to sons at twenty-one; and should there be no such son or daughter then the term to cease. There were four children of the marriage who attained twenty one, but two only survived both parents. Was the portional fund to be divided between the four or given to the two who survived? Sir T. Plumer said, "If the children who died before the surviving parent are to be considered as having taken vested interests, it must follow that a vested interest was given on a contingency. Can that be? When a fund is contingent the shares to be paid out of it must be contingent. If all the children had died before the surviving parent, the fund would not have been raisable, and therefore till such parent's death it was uncertain and contingent whether it could be raised. The intention appears to me, therefore, to have been to provide only for such children as should survive the surviving parent."

Where vesting not provided for by the settlement.

4. Where the settlement is silent as to the vesting of the portions, the Court has to fall back upon general principles, and Remnant v. Hood (c) is an important case upon this head. A testator devised his estate to Samuel Thorold for life, with remainder to his first and other sons successively in tail, with remainder to his first and other daughters successively in tail, and enabled the tenant for life to charge 2,000*l.* for the portions of his younger children. S. Thorold accordingly upon his marriage charged 2,000*l.* to be raised within three months from his decease in favour of his younger children, but gave no directions as to the time of vesting. There were issue of the marriage a son and six daughters; the son died an infant in the father's lifetime, so that on the death of the father the eldest daughter became tenant in tail in possession. Two others of the daughters died infants in their father's lifetime, and the three remaining daughters married and attained twenty-one and two of them survived the father, but the other died in his lifetime. It was conceded by the counsel that the infants who died in the father's lifetime would take nothing, though L. J. Knight Bruce entertained a doubt (a). But as to the one who attained twenty-one and died in the father's lifetime, it was contended that the portion as a charge upon land had by the death of the portionist before the time for raising it sunk for the benefit of the estate. It was ruled, however, to the contrary, and the deceased child who had attained twenty-one and married was held entitled to participate. Lord Justice Turner, who applied himself to the points raised with his usual care, observed, "There are three periods at which the portions may have been intended to vest; the period of the birth of the children, the period at which they would require their portions (which, according to the ordinary habit in such cases as evidenced by the usual course of settlement, would be at twenty-one, or as to the daughters on marriage), and the period of the death of the parents. Looking both to the language and to the purpose of this instrument, I see nothing which in any way imports that the portions were not intended to vest during the lives of the parents, and to adopt the period of the death as the time of vesting would be to deprive the provision of that certainty which it must, I think, fairly be taken to have been the object of the settlement to secure. It would render the interests of the children contingent upon their surviving their parents, and deprive them of the means of making any certain provisions for their families during the whole of their parents' lives. This is a result against which the Court has struggled and successfully struggled in many cases, and I think therefore that we should not be justified in adopting this period as the time of vesting, in the absence of anything on the face of the instrument indicating that it was so intended. Between the other two periods it is not, as I have said, necessary for us to decide, but I think it right to state that I lean to the opinion, that in this particular case the true period of vesting was at twenty-one, or as to the daughters on marriage. The consequence of holding the portions to vest at the birth would be that the shares of children dying in early infancy would go to the parent, thus contravening the purpose of the settlement, by giving to the father what was intended for the children, and the Court in these cases seems to have regarded rather the purpose than the words of the settlement" (a).

General rule.

5. Upon the authority of these and other cases it may be considered as established, that unless there be something special in the instrument (b), the portions of the younger children, whether they survive the tenant for life or not, will not vest in sons unless they attain twenty-one, or in daughters unless they attain twenty-one or marry (c); and that the shares of sons who attain twenty-one and of daughters who attain twenty-one or marry, will vest absolutely, so as not to be divested by subsequent death in the lifetime of the tenant for life (d).

Vesting of portions.

6. Where portions are expressly made to vest in sons at twenty-one, and in daughters at twenty-one or marriage, if any son or daughter die before that period the share sinks into the estate (e), even though the instrument direct the interest on the portion to be applied during minority towards that child's maintenance (f).

Where raisable out of rents.

7. Several cases, however, seem to have made good the exception that where no time is named in the settlement for vesting, and the portions are to be raised, not out of the corpus, but out of the annual rents and profits, and the rents and profits have begun to be available for the purpose, then the portionist takes a vested interest, though he dies in infancy (a). The portion must, as a whole, be either vested or not vested, and cannot be intermittent, and therefore as the trust to raise the portion has commenced it must go on.

[8. The question arose in the recent case of Henty v. Wrey (b), whether a power to appoint portions could be so exercised as to vest portions absolutely in children of tender years, and Kay, J., relying on Lord Hinchinbroke v. Seymour as reported by Brown (c), held that it could not, but that such an appointment would be so improper that the Court would control it by refusing to allow the portions to be raised if the children did not live to want them. But this view was overruled on appeal, when the late M.R., after careful consideration of the case of Lord Hinchinbroke v. Seymour, came to the conclusion that it was really decided on the ground of fraud on the power, and was no authority in support of the view that the power could not be exercised in favour of infants; and Lindley, L.J., stated the following propositions as the result of his examination of the authorities (d):— [Appointment to infant.]

"1. That powers to appoint portions charged on land ought, if their language is doubtful, to be construed so as not to authorise appointments vesting those portions in the appointees before they want them—that is, before they attain twenty-one (or if daughters) marry.

2. That where the language of the power is clear and unambiguous, effect must be given to it.

3. That where upon the true construction of the power and the appointment the portion has not vested in the lifetime of the appointee, the portion is not raisable, but sinks into the inheritance.

4. That where upon the true construction of both instruments the portion has vested in the appointee, the portion is raisable, even although the appointee dies under twenty-one, or (if a daughter) unmarried.

5. That appointments vesting portions charged on land in children of tender years, who die soon afterwards, are looked at with suspicion; and very little additional evidence of improper motive or object will induce the Court to set aside the appointment or treat it as invalid, but that without some additional evidence the Court cannot do so."]

Fourthly. Of Ademption and Satisfaction.—The question who are portionists involves the doctrine of Ademption and Satisfaction, and we propose briefly to state the leading principles.

Ademption and satisfaction.

1. The nature of Ademption and Satisfaction may be best illustrated by instances. A father by his will bequeaths 1,000*l.* to a daughter, and after the date of the will he settles 1,000*l.* upon the same daughter upon the occasion of her marriage, and dies without having altered his will. Here the father, owing a debt of nature to his daughter (a), had originally intended to satisfy the obligation by a bequest in his will, but before the will takes effect the marriage occurs, and he makes the like provision for her by act inter vivos. In such a case the Court presumes that the father did not mean to bestow two portions upon the daughter at the expense perhaps of his other children, but to substitute the one portion for the other. Equity therefore holds that the subsequent (b) advance is an ademption of the legacy. "Where," said Lord Eldon, "a parent or person standing loco parentis gives a legacy as a portion, and afterwards, upon marriage or any other occasion calling for it, makes an advance in the nature of a portion to the child, that will amount to an ademption of the gift by the will, and this Court will presume he meant to satisfy the one by the other" (c). Ademption, therefore, is where the will precedes, and the settlement follows.

If, again, a father by act inter vivos covenant to settle 1,000*l.* on the marriage of his daughter, and afterwards either by act inter vivos (d) or by will gives 1,000*l.* to the same daughter, here the Court leaning against double portions precludes the daughter (in the absence of evidence to the contrary) from taking both the marriage portion and also the subsequent gift or legacy, and puts her to her election which one of the two she will prefer (e). Satisfaction, therefore, is where the settlement precedes and the gift or legacy follows. It might have been wise, as observed V. C. Wood, if the rule had never been applied where the settlement is anterior to the gift or will, as the testator or donor might well be said to know what had been previously done (a). But the law is established otherwise, and in general terms Satisfaction may be defined to be the donation of a thing with the intention that it is to be taken either wholly or in part, in extinguishment of some prior (legal) claim of the donee (b).

(c) Trimmer v. Bayne, 7 Ves. 515.

Persons loco parentis.

2. The doctrine of Ademption and Satisfaction applies only as between parents (whether father or mother) (c), or persons loco parentis on the one hand and children on the other. The doctrine does not hold as between strangers (d), or as between husband and wife (e), or as between brothers, or as between grandfather and grandchild, or as between uncle and nephew, or as between any other relatives than as above. But a brother may by his conduct place himself loco parentis to a brother (f), and a grandfather (g), uncle (h), or other relative or connection, as a stepfather (i), may place himself loco parentis to a grandchild, nephew, or other relative or connection; and this though the person loco parentis has children of his own (j), and though the actual father be living and the child be resident with him and is maintained by him (k). So a putative father is not in law the parent of the illegitimate child (l), but he may place himself loco parentis by a course of conduct. And Lord Thurlow, in speaking of a parent's provision for a child, observed generally, "as to its being considered as the payment of a debt, the law does not compel the parent to give the legacy; the Court can only mean a moral obligation, a laudable affection which may exist in others besides a parent" (m).

How persons constituted loco parentis.

3. By what acts a person will place himself loco parentis is a question upon which parol evidence is admissible (a), and is often in practice a question of extreme difficulty (b). According to Sir W. Grant, "A person loco parentis is one who assumes the parental character or discharges parental duties" (c). Sir L. Shadwell said, "The legal sense of the term is that the party has so acted towards the children, as that he has thereby imposed upon himself a moral obligation to provide for them" (d); and Lord Eldon speaks of him as "a person meaning to put himself loco parentis, in the situation of the person described as the lawful father of the child" (e); and Lord Cottenham attached great force in this description to the word "meaning," as referring to the intention rather than the act of the party (f), and added, that the definition was to be considered as applicable not to all the parental offices and duties (for they were infinitely various) but to such offices and duties as related to the making provision for a child (g). If a person has contributed to the maintenance of a female relative from the time of her father's death, and has been treated as one whose consent was necessary upon her marriage, and has taken upon himself the obligation of making a provision for her upon marriage, he must under such circumstances be regarded as having placed himself loco parentis (h).

Presumption.

4. Ademption and Satisfaction are both Presumptions only—that is, where there is no intrinsic evidence one way or another, the Court presumes that double portions were not meant. But if the Court collects from the written instrument that double portions were intended, no presumption arises, and therefore parol evidence cannot be let in to contradict the written instrument (i). Where there is no intrinsic evidence to the contrary the presumption arises, and then this presumption, like any other, may be rebutted by extrinsic or parol evidence (j) and of course counter evidence may be given to support and fortify the original presumption (a). There is no doubt that sometimes this presumption of law defeats the real intention, but as a general rule it effectuates the intention, and were it not for the doctrine under consideration, the provisions for families would often be most unjust, and the farthest from the settlor's actual wishes (b).

Subjects must be ejusdem generis.

5. Ademption and Satisfaction are held to apply only where the properties which are the subject of the two gifts are ejusdem generis. A legacy of money will not be adeemed by a subsequent settlement of land; and a covenant to settle specific lands will not be satisfied by a subsequent settlement of money (c). A bequest of 10,000*l.* was not adeemed by a subsequent settlement of a beneficial lease (d), and a legacy of 500*l.* was not adeemed by a subsequent gift of stock in trade upon the father's taking the son into partnership (e). But where a father covenanted upon the marriage of his son to pay 2,000*l.* by way of portion, and afterwards by his will bequeathed to his son certain powder works and so much money as when added to the powder works would make up the sum of 10,000*l.*, the amount in money required to make up the sum of 10,000*l.* was in fact an ordinary legacy, and was therefore applied in satisfaction of the marriage portion (f). [So where a father gave a bond for the payment of a sum of 10,000*l.* to his reputed son on a future day, and shortly before the day of payment took the son into partnership with him, and the articles provided that 19,000*l.* of the capital brought in by the father should belong to the son, it was held that the bond was satisfied (g). And a covenant by a father on the marriage of his son to pay him an annuity for his life has been deemed satisfied by a legacy subsequently given by the father's will (h); but where shares in a partnership business were bequeathed to the testator's sons, and subsequently the testator assigned a share to one on his being admitted a partner, it was held that, the intention of the father being to give his son an increased payment for his services in the business, the presumption of a partial ademption was rebutted (a).]

Intention expressed.

6. A legacy will not be adeemed by a subsequent advance if the latter be expressed to be in satisfaction of some other and quite different claim, as in satisfaction of a legacy under the will of a former testator (b), or if the subsequent advance be for a particular purpose, as to buy furniture (c).

Legacies and advances.

7. Legacies to a child are always regarded as portions unless it be otherwise expressed (d), and so are all advances inter vivos by a parent to a child unless the instrument itself show (as sometimes happens) that the second gift was alio intuitu and not meant as a portion (e).

Advance of less amount.

8. Where the subsequent advance is of less amount than the previous legacy, it was for some time doubtful what would be the effect—whether the advance would adeem the whole legacy (f), or whether the doctrine of ademption would be excluded altogether, or whether it would be an ademption pro tanto or to the extent of the advance. It has now been settled that under such circumstances the subsequent advance will be an ademption pro tanto, so that the child can claim only the balance of the legacy (g).

Residue.

9. A share of a testator's residuary estate is regarded as a legacy to the amount of the share, and therefore if a testator bequeaths his residuary estate amongst his children and afterwards makes an advance in favour of a child, such advance, if it equal or exceed the amount of the share, will be an ademption of the whole share, and, if it be of less amount, will be an ademption of that child's share of the residue pro tanto (h).

If a father stands in the position of a mere debtor to his child, advances by him of sums less than the amount of the indebtedness are not pro tanto a satisfaction of the debt; Reade v. Reade, 9 L. So if a parent make a provision for a child in his lifetime and afterwards bequeaths a residue to the same child, the amount of the residue will be an absolute or partial satisfaction to the amount of the residue (a).

Codicil.

10. It has been argued that where a testator gives a legacy to a child and then makes an advance, and then by a codicil republishes the will, the original legacy shall be restored. But the Court has held the true construction of the codicil to be that the will is to have the effect which it would have had if the codicil had not been made, except as altered by the codicil, and that as the double provision would not have taken place had the codicil not been made, it will not be set up by the codicil (b).

Husband and issue.

11. As a child's portion is commonly settled upon the child for life with remainder to the issue, with a limitation in the case of a daughter to her husband for life, the Court regards the limitations to the issue, and in the case of a daughter the limitation of the life estate to the husband as parts of the provision for the child, so that not only the life estate of the child, but also the interests of the children and husband are brought into the account as parts of the advance to the child (c).

If a father covenant to settle on his daughter and her children and then makes a bequest to her children, this is a satisfaction of the covenant as regards the children of the daughter (d). [So where under the father's covenant the children of a daughter became entitled as tenants in common, and the father gave legacies to one of the children of the daughter, and to two children of a deceased child of the daughter, it was held that the legacies were pro tanto a satisfaction of the covenant as to the interests of the legatees (e).] But if a father upon the marriage of his son covenant to settle a fund upon him and his wife and children, and in consideration thereof the father of the wife makes a settlement at the same time, and then the father of the son bequeaths a share of his estate to the son, the legacy to the son, though operating in satisfaction of the son's interest under the father's settlement, is not a satisfaction of the interest of the son's children (a).

Slight differences.

12. The Court from its leaning against double portions will not allow slight differences in the limitations to rebut the presumption, and by slight differences are meant such as, in the opinion of the judge, leave the two provisions substantially of the same nature (b). The cases upon the subject have generally arisen with reference to ademption (c), but the rule applies also to satisfaction (d). In the case of a debt (as distinct from a portion), said Lord Cottenham, small circumstances of difference between the debt and the legacy are held to negative the presumption of satisfaction (e), but in the case of portions small circumstances are disregarded. Thus it is, that a smaller legacy is not held to be in satisfaction of part of a larger debt, but it may be satisfaction pro tanto of a portion (f). However, the differences in the limitations may be so great as to negative the presumption of satisfaction in case even of portions (g). If a father covenant on the marriage of his daughter to pay a sum by way of portion, and then by his will bequeaths to her a share of his residuary estate, but by the same will gives directions for payment of his debts, the presumption of satisfaction is negatived by the direction for payment of debts, and then the portion is raised as a debt, while the daughter is also allowed to claim a share of the residue (h). But if a testator direct payment of his debts and gives a share of his residuary estate to a daughter and then makes an advance to her upon her marriage, the presumption of ademption is not negatived by the direction for payment of debts in the previous will (a). Where a father is a debtor, not morally, but actually to his child, as for money advanced by the child or on any other account, a bequest by the father to the child is no satisfaction, where it would not be a satisfaction as between the father and a stranger (b), but what would be a satisfaction as between strangers, will also be a satisfaction as between father and child (c).

Contingent legacy.

13. A contingent legacy bequeathed by a father will not be a satisfaction of a vested interest in the child under a previous settlement (d).

Strangers may be benefited.

14. A stranger may indirectly derive advantage from the doctrine of ademption, as where a testator gives a legacy to the child, and the residue to strangers, and then in his lifetime advances the child beyond the amount of the legacy. Here the ademption of the legacy swells the quantum of the residue for the benefit of the residuary legatees. This arises not from the application of the doctrine, but in spite of it, and therefore, where a testator bequeaths his residue equally between his wife or a stranger, and his child, and then advances the child in his lifetime, here the advance is not brought into account so as to augment the residue for the benefit of the wife or stranger, but the wife or stranger can claim only the moiety of the actual residue (e).

Ademption and satisfaction distinguished.

15. Ademption and satisfaction are often confounded, but one broad distinction between them must not be lost sight of. Where the will precedes and the settlement follows, the settlement is an actual extinguishment of the claim under the will. But where the settlement precedes and the will or gift follows, here as the settlement created a legal obligation or vested a legal right by act inter vivos, the subsequent testamentary disposition cannot annul it, but all that equity can do is to put the parties entitled under the legal obligation or legal gift, to their election. Thus a testator bequeaths 1000*l.* to his daughter, and afterwards on the daughter's marriage settles 1,000*l.* upon her. Here the will is considered as revoked, and the claims under the will are actually extinguished. If, on the other hand, a father covenants on the daughter's marriage to settle 1,000*l.* upon her and afterwards by will bequeaths 1,000*l.* to the daughter, here the legal obligation under the settlement remains, and the daughter if she chooses may insist on her claims under the settlement. But if she does so, the Court will not also allow her to claim under the will, or in other words the Court puts her to her election (a).

[16. Where two instruments are contemporaneous, so that both are present to the donor's mind when he is executing them, that circumstance affords a strong reason against holding a gift in the one to be a satisfaction of an obligation under the other (b).]

SECTION II.

WHAT AMOUNT IS RAISABLE UNDER THE HEAD OF PORTIONS.

Capital.

THIS question arises as to capital and interest, and maintenance money and costs.

1. As to the amount of capital to be raised, the instrument itself generally prescribes the sum with sufficient exactness, and according to the common form now adopted in settlements, the amount graduates according to the number of children, i.e. a certain sum if there be only one younger child who takes a vested interest, an increased sum if there be two such children, and a larger sum still if there be three or more such children.

Ambiguity.

2. Occasionally the settlement has been so ambiguously expressed with reference to the events contemplated, that recourse to the Court has become necessary. Thus, in Hemming v. Griffith (c), the trust was that if there should be one younger child the trustee should raise 8,000*l.*, and if two younger children 12,000*l.*, and if three or more younger children 15,000*l.*, the said portions to be paid as the husband and wife or the survivor should appoint, and in default of appointment the portions to vest in sons at twenty-one, and in daughters at twenty-one or marriage, and the settlement contained powers of maintenance and advancement out of the portions after the death of the parents, or in their lifetime with their consent. There were three younger children, but two of them died in infancy; and the question was whether the one who attained twenty-one was entitled to the 8,000*l.* or the 15,000*l.* Sir J. Stuart said, "It seems clear enough that if there should be three or more younger children, during the infancy of the three children the trusts for raising the 15,000*l.* were to have an operation and might be resorted to for the purposes of advancement and maintenance. If so, how can anything which has happened since the three younger children were born, reduce the trust for raising 15,000*l.* to a trust for raising 8,000*l.* only which was to be raised expressly, and in terms, in the event of there being only one younger child?" and the surviving portionist was declared entitled to the 15,000*l.*

Interest.

3. The right to interest and the rate of it, and the time from which it is to be calculated, should all be specified in the settlement, but in the absence of any express direction, a portion like any other sum of money charged on land, will carry interest with it by implication from the time when the capital ought to have been raised (a), and this interest will in England be at 4 per cent. (b); and in Ireland at 5 per cent. (c). But if the settlement while it is silent as to the interest on the portions, expressly and carefully and with all necessary circumstantiality provides for the interest on all the other charges, the presumption arises that interest on the portions was intentionally excluded, and the Court considers the general rule as inapplicable (d).

Out of rents.

4. In the rare case where the portions are to be raised not by sale or mortgage out of the corpus of the estate, but out of the annual rents and profits, the Court looking to the hardship of allowing the interest to accumulate for years against the income, raises the capital only and gives no interest (a).

Interest given, though portion not vested.

5. Where there is the relation of father and child, or of a person standing loco parentis and a child, the natural duty and therefore the presumed intention of providing for the child is so strong as to have led to the establishment of peculiar principles. Some of these have already passed under review, and another is this :

Maintenance.

A legacy given to a stranger and payable at the age of twenty-one carries no interest in the meantime, but a legacy to a child being an infant (b) and payable at twenty-one, if maintenance be not otherwise provided for the child (c), carries interest with it (d) from the death of the testator, and not as in ordinary legacies from the expiration of one year from the testator's death (e). So a portion charged on land in favour of a child, whether made payable at a particular age or without any direction as to payment, will carry interest with it from the death of the testator. But as the rate of interest is discretionary, the Court has not considered itself bound by the general rule of 4 per cent., but has regulated itself by the circumstances of each particular case. The application of these principles will be best understood by the following instances :—

Rate of interest.

In Warr v. Warr (f) a father charged the estate with portions for younger children, "to be paid at such time as the trustees should appoint for their better maintenance and preferment." There were three younger children, a son and two daughters. The son was apprenticed to a sea captain and a sum paid by the trustees for his outfit; the two daughters attained twenty-one and received their portions. The son died under age before the trustee had named any day for payment of his portion. It was ruled that the son's portion was not to be raised, as he had not lived to want it; but it was "agreed that all the children were to be maintained out of the trust estate, they having no maintenance in the meantime, and what had been employed for putting out the younger son was to come out of the trust estate."

In Staniforth v. Staniforth (a) an estate was settled on the father and mother successively for life, with remainder in default of issue male to trustees for a term of five hundred years in trust to raise 1,000*l.* for the daughters' portions, but no time was appointed for payment. The father died without issue male, leaving a daughter who filed her bill, living the mother, to have the 1,000*l.* raised. The M. R. held: 1. That by the failure of issue male the term had arisen, though not to take effect in possession until the death of the mother. 2. That the portion vested in the daughter in the lifetime of the mother (the daughter it is presumed having attained twenty-one); and 3. That no time being appointed for the payment of any portion, nor any maintenance in the meantime, she was entitled to a reasonable maintenance not exceeding the interest of the portion from the death of the father, or at the least from such time as the portion might have been raised by sale.

Beal v. Beal (b) was this: An estate was settled on the father and mother successively for life, with remainder to the father's brother in tail, &c., and a power to charge portions was given to the father. He appointed the sum of 2,000*l.* for his two daughters, payable at eighteen or marriage, but without saying after the death of his wife, and then died. The two daughters, who were under eighteen, filed their bill in the lifetime of the mother, to have interest for their portions until raisable. Lord Harcourt decreed that they should have interest at 3 per cent. until they were twelve years old, and then 4 per cent. until the portions were raisable. Being dissatisfied with the rate of interest, they had the case re-heard before Lord Cowper, who said he thought the former decree very tender in the provision thereby made, and that it was rather a recommendation to the mother to make them that allowance than a decree to charge her jointure therewith, but that since they were not satisfied, he must now give them no more than what in strict justice they could demand, and that since the portions were not payable till eighteen or marriage, he could not charge the jointress with interest thereof in the meantime, but that as the reason for postponing the payment till eighteen was in favour of the jointress, she ought to maintain them out of the profits of her jointure lands.

In Harvey v. Harvey (c) a testator charged all his real and personal estate with 1,000*l.* a-piece to all his younger children, payable at twenty-one, but gave no directions as to maintenance in the meantime. The younger children during their infancy filed their bill to be allowed interest or maintenance. The M. R. said "that in this case the Court would do what in common presumption a father if living would, nay, ought to have done, which was to provide necessaries for his children, but a Court of Equity would make hard shifts for the provision of children, as where the younger children were left destitute and the eldest an infant, the Court would make such a liberal allowance to the guardian of the eldest, as that he might thereout be enabled to maintain all the children. And for the same reason the Court would likewise take a latitude in this case, and that since interest was pretty much in the breast of the Court, though the will was silent with regard to that, yet it should be presumed that the father who gave these legacies intended they should carry interest if the estate would bear it, for every one must suppose it to have been the intention of the father that his children should not want bread during their infancy, but that where the estate appeared to be small, the Court, in whose discretion it always lay to determine the quantum of interest, had ordered the lower interest."

General rule.

6. It will be collected from the preceding cases that portions provided for children have this peculiar quality, that whether made payable at a certain age or not, they are so far contingent as not to be raisable, but to sink into the land, where the children do not live to want their portions—that is, where the children being sons do not attain twenty-one, or being daughters do not attain that age or marry; but that on the other hand portions are so far considered vested as to carry with them such a rate of interest or such allowance as the Court may deem necessary for the reasonable maintenance of the children.

Costs.

7. As regards the costs of raising portions the general rule as to charges applies, that is, the costs must be thrown on the estate, and the portions bear no part of them (a), and of course under the head of costs will be included all charges and expenses properly incurred.

(a) Armstrong v. Armstrong, 18 L. R. Eq. 541; Michell v. Michell, 4 Beav. 549; Trafford v. Ashton, 1 P. W. 415.

SECTION III.

AT WHAT PERIOD THE PORTIONS ARE RAISABLE.

Portions out of reversions.

1. We have next to inquire at what period the portions are to be raised, and upon this subject the great contest has been whether they shall or not be raised while the security created for the purpose is still reversionary. The cases are unusually numerous and extremely conflicting, and the only result to be obtained is that the question must be decided by the "penning of the trust," or in other words, that if the instrument be unequivocal in itself as to the actual intention of the parties, the Court must carry out the intention whatever may be the consequential inconvenience. A sale or mortgage must necessarily be made at a disadvantage when the security is reversionary, but if the meaning be clear it must be done. We cannot better explain the principles by which the Court is now regulated, than by a statement of the two leading authorities.

Codrington v. Foley.

2. In Codrington v. Foley (a) a testator devised an estate to trustees for ninety-nine years from the testator's decease, remainder to Lord Foley for life, remainder to other trustees for 1,000 years, to commence from the death of Lord Foley, for raising 30,000*l.* for portions of younger children at twenty-one or marriage, remainder to the first and other sons of Lord Foley in tail. The trusts of the term of ninety-nine years were for applying the rents with the proceeds of the timber in discharge of certain incumbrances. Lord Foley died in 1793, leaving an only son, and a daughter who became Mrs. Codrington. Mr. and Mrs. Codrington filed their bill to have the 30,000*l.* raised, and it was objected that the trusts of the term of ninety-nine years were still in operation and unsatisfied, and that the 1,000 years term was consequently reversionary both at law and in equity, and while so reversionary it could not be sold or mortgaged, to the great injury of the tenant in tail. Lord Eldon came to the conclusion that the 30,000*l.* must be raised, though the term for raising it was reversionary, and after reviewing the opinions of Lord Cowper, Lord Macclesfield, Lord Hardwicke, Lord Talbot, Lord Thurlow, and Lord Alvanley upon the subject (b), he proceeded, "Upon this general state of the doctrine of the Court, it appears to me that the proper rule is what Lord Talbot states—that the raising or not raising must depend upon the particular penning of the trust, and the intention of the instrument. I do not think the Court ought to be eager to lay hold of circumstances. The Court ought to hold an equal mind whilst construing the instrument, and I cannot agree with what is stated in Stanley v. Stanley (a) that very small grounds are sufficient. If they are sufficient to denote the intention, they are not small grounds. If they are not sufficient to denote the intention, the Court does not act according to its duty by treating them as sufficient, thereby disappointing the true intention of the instrument. The rule upon the whole depends upon this, whether it was the intention, attending to the whole of it, that the portion should or should not be raised in this manner. If there be nothing more than a limitation to the parent for life, with a (reversionary) term to raise portions at the age of twenty-one or marriage, and the interests are vested and the contingencies have happened at which the portions are to be paid, the interest is payable and the portions must be raised, in the only manner in which they can be raised, that is, by mortgage or sale of the reversionary term" (b).

3. In Codrington v. Foley the term for raising the portions was reversionary upon another term, the trusts of which were unsatisfied: but in the case of Smyth v. Foley (c) it was reversionary upon the life estate of the father, and yet the same result followed.

Smyth v. Foley.

Thus an estate was limited by settlement upon marriage to R. Chambers for life, remainder to M. E. his wife for life in bar of dower, remainder to trustees for 500 years, remainder to the first and other sons successively in tail, and the trusts of the term were declared to be by sale or mortgage or other means to raise 4,000*l.* for the younger children, the portions "to be paid" at their respective ages of twenty-one years, and of daughters at those ages or marriage; and upon further trust "until the same portions should become payable as aforesaid, to raise a competent yearly sum out of the rents and profits," for maintenance and education, with a power "after the decease of Richard Chambers, or in his lifetime with his consent," to raise moneys for advancement. There were six children of the marriage, three sons and three daughters, all of whom attained twenty-one. After the death of M. E. Chambers the wife, but in the lifetime of R. Chambers, the younger children filed their bill to have the 4,000*l.* raised. Baron Alderson in giving judgment laid down the following rules: That First, where a term is limited in remainder to commence in possession after the death of the father, yet if the trust is to raise a portion payable at a fixed period, the child shall not wait for the death of the father before the portion is raised, but at the fixed period may compel a sale of the term (a). Secondly. Where the period is not fixed by the original settlement, but depends on a contingency, the rule applies as soon as the contingency happens (b). Thirdly. Where not only the period but the class of children, in favour of whom the portions are to be raised, depends on a contingency (as when it is limited to take effect in case the father dies without issue male by his wife), there also on the contingency happening by the death of the wife without issue male the portions are raisable immediately, and the term is saleable in the lifetime of the father (c). The Judge then expressed his entire concurrence in the principles laid down by Lord Eldon (viz. that the intention must be collected from the whole settlement taken together), and finding an express direction that the portions were to be paid at twenty-one or marriage, and that the settlement contained nothing at variance with that construction, he decreed the portions to be raised by sale or mortgage of the reversionary term.

(a) 1 Atk. 549. (b) 6 Ves. 379.
(c) 3 Y. & C. 142.

General rule and exceptions.

4. Such are the general rules by which the Courts now profess to be governed. We must, however, add the caution that when the grounds upon which the Court acted in any case are not sufficient to warrant the decision upon a fair construction of the instrument itself, and independently of and apart from any arguments based on the inconvenience of burdening the estate, such case cannot at the present day be relied upon as an authority.

And particular and special cases have occurred in which the Court has refused to raise the portions out of a reversionary term.

(a) Sandys v. Sandys, 1 P. W. 707; Hellier v. Jones, 1 Eq. Ca. Ab. 337; Bacon v. Clerk, Pr. Ch. 500; Stanley v. Stanley, 1 Atk. 549; Conway v. Conway, 3 B. C. C. 267; Brome v. Berkley, 2 P. W. 486, per Cur.; Cotton v. Cotton, 3 Y. & C. 149, note.

W. 180; Smith v. Evans, Amb. 633; Staniforth v. Staniforth, 2 Vern. 460. In other cases the contingency did not occur. See Worsley v. Granville, 2 Ves. sen. 331; Hall v. Hewer, Amb. 203; Corbett v. Maidwell, 1 Salk. 159.

Thus, in Corbett v. Maidwell (a), the estate was settled upon marriage on Thomas for life, remainder to trustees for 500 years, remainder to the heirs male of the body of Thomas by his intended wife, "and if he died without issue male by his intended wife, and there should be one or more daughters which should be unmarried or unprovided for at the time of his death," then to raise portions for the daughter or daughters payable at eighteen or marriage with maintenance in the meantime. The wife died without issue male, but leaving a daughter who married, and she and her husband filed their bill to have the portions raised during the father's life. The Court refused the relief asked, on the ground that the portion was contingent on the daughter being unmarried and unprovided for at the father's death, a contingency which had not yet happened.

In Butler v. Duncomb (b), the marriage settlement limited the estate to George for life, remainder to Mary for life, remainder to the first and other sons in tail male, remainder to trustees for 500 years upon trust, that the trustees should "from and after the commencement of the term" raise portions for the younger children payable at twenty-one or marriage; remainder to George in fee. George died, leaving a daughter the only issue, who married, and then she and her husband filed their bill to have the portion raised in the lifetime of the mother. But the Court declined to make any such order, as the trust was to raise the portion from and after the commencement of the term, which meant the commencement in possession, and that this implied a negative, viz. that it was not to be raised before.

In Brome v. Berkley (c) the marriage settlement was to George for life, remainder to the wife for life for her jointure, remainder to the first and other sons in tail, remainder to trustees and their heirs to raise portions for daughters, payable at twenty-one or marriage with maintenance in the meantime, "the first payment of the maintenance money to be made at such half-yearly feast as should next happen after the estate limited to the trustees should take effect in possession." The husband died leaving no issue but a daughter who attained twenty-one, and filed her bill in the mother's lifetime, to have the portion raised. Lord King dismissed the bill, on the ground that the maintenance was not to be raised until the estate of the trustees came into possession, and

"it was absurd to say that the portion should be raised first, and the maintenance money paid afterwards."

In Stevens v. Dethick (a) the estate was limited to Dethick for life, remainder to his wife for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to trustees for 500 years, to raise portions for daughters payable at twenty-one or marriage, with a direction that the daughters should have maintenance out of the premises comprised in the term, "and that the residue of the rents, issues, and profits above such yearly maintenance should in the meantime, till the portions became payable, be received by such persons as should be entitled to the reversion expectant upon the determination of the said term." Lord Hardwicke considered the latter clause to show an intention, that the maintenance money, and therefore also the portion itself, was not to be raised until the term fell into possession. He therefore dismissed the bill filed by the only daughter after the death of her mother, but in the lifetime of her father.

In Massy v. Lloyd (b) the estate was limited to trustees for 999 years upon trust for the wife for her life, and after her decease upon trust to pay an annuity to the husband, and to apply the residue of the rents during the husband's life, as the wife should appoint (a power which was executed), and on the death of the survivor of the husband and wife to raise 15,000*l.* for younger children's portions, and subject as above the estate was settled on the first and other sons in tail. The wife died, and it was held that the portions were not raisable during the life of the husband. The case was a very special one, but the argument that chiefly prevailed was based upon the fact that all the rents, issues, and profits during the lifetime of the husband had been expressly disposed of otherwise.

5. Hitherto we have adverted only to the question whether portions shall be raised, while the term charged with them is still reversionary. But there are also other circumstances affecting the portionists personally, which have a material bearing upon the inquiry, at what time the portions are to be raised.

Time of raising portions in special cases.

6. If a specific sum be given to A., payable at her age of twenty-one, or day of marriage, the money cannot be raised until the interest has become vested; for should the fund on which the money raised is invested prove deficient, the portionist might still have recourse to the estate (a). And so where the trust of a term was to raise 3,000*l.* for younger children, payable at their respective ages of twenty-one years, or days of marriage, it was held that the trustees were not authorised, when one child had attained his age of twenty-one years, to raise the entire sum, for the infant children could not be deprived of the real security for their shares (b). But from the manifest convenience of raising the portions at once, it seems the Court will lean to that construction where anything appears upon the instrument to warrant such a course. Thus the trustees of a marriage settlement were directed, after the death of the husband, to levy and raise by mortgage, sale, or other disposition of the estate, if there should be more than three children, the sum of 10,000*l.* for their portions, the shares of the sons to be vested in, and payable to them at the age of twenty-one, and the shares of the daughters at twenty-one or marriage; and it was provided that no mortgage should be made until some one of the portions should become payable. Four of the children had attained twenty-one and three were under age; and the Vice-Chancellor said, "In this settlement there is a clause that no mortgage is to be made until some one of the portions shall become payable. The whole 10,000*l.* must therefore be raised at once. It is objected that some of the shares may become diminished in amount: the answer to that is, that the Court considers the investment in the 3 per cent. Consols as equivalent to payment. If there is any rise in the funds the children under age will have the benefit of it" (c).

SECTION IV.

IN WHAT MODE THE PORTIONS ARE TO BE RAISED.

WHERE an estate is settled subject to portions, the presumed intention is that the portions should impede as little as possible the devolution of the property in the main channel of the limitations. Moral duty requires that some support should be secured

(a) Dickinson v. Dickinson, 3 B. C. C. 19.

(b) Wynter v. Bold, 1 S. & S. 507.

(c) Gillibrand v. Goold, 5 Sim. 149. [In Peareth v. Greenwood, 28 W. R. 417, the portions of those children who had not attained twenty-one were provided for by carrying over a sum of stock sufficient at the present price to satisfy them, with a margin for depreciation.]

for the younger children, but this should be done at as little sacrifice as circumstances will allow to the family consequence as represented by the eldest son.

Modes of raising portions.

1. In raising portions, therefore, it is primâ facie undesirable to sell any part of the estate. So recourse should rather be had to levying the required amount by a side wind, as by the produce of mines or a fall of timber; or, if this cannot be done, then by a mortgage rather than by an absolute disposition, for though a mortgage is usually accompanied with a power of sale, so that eventually the property may pass into the hands of a stranger, yet until actual sale the owner under the settlement has the opportunity of paying off the charge from his private means. In every case, however, the language of the instrument must govern. If portions be simply charged on an estate, either expressly or by implication, (as where a charge is implied from a power limited to the portionist of distraining for non-payment (a),) the money may be raised by mortgage or sale as in the case of any other charge.

Where a sale is excluded.

2. A trust to raise the portions by mortgage will not authorise a sale, but if the trust be to levy the amount by mortgage or otherwise a power of sale is implied (b). If the trust be to raise the charge by and out of the rents or by such other ways and means except a sale as the trustees may think proper, not only a sale is prohibited but a mortgage also which may lead to an absolute disposition, as it enables the mortgagee by foreclosure to get possession of the estate (c).

Out of income or corpus.

3. If the portions be raisable by and out of the rents and profits or by mortgage, here the words are ambiguous, and are capable of the construction that the trustees have an option of levying the portions either out of the income or out of the corpus, and so of throwing the onus at their discretion either upon the tenant for life or upon the remainderman (d). But the Court will lean strongly against such a construction (e). In some cases the meaning is that the annual rents should be primarily charged, and that the deficit only should be raised out of the corpus. Thus where the trustees were to hold an estate during the minority of the devisee, and to raise portions by and out of the rents and profits or by sale or mortgage, and on the devisee attaining the age of twenty-one to pay the rents to him after payment of the portions, the Court said that as the devisee on attaining twenty-one was to take such accumulated rents and profits only, as should remain after satisfying the portions, the testator intended that the rents and profits should be first applied, and that the balance only could be raised by sale or mortgage (a).

[Where the portions were raisable "by mortgaging or otherwise disposing of the lands, or out of the rents and profits, or by any other ways or means," and unsuccessful efforts had been made to raise the portions by mortgage of the property, it was held that the trustees were at liberty to apply the rents and profits first in payment of the interest, and secondly in reduction of the capital of the portions (b).]

Out of rents.

4. A more common case is where the portions are directed to be raised out of the rents and profits simply, and nothing more is said. Here if a definite time be fixed for payment of the portions, the ordinary and primâ facie meaning of rents and profits is taken to be inconsistent with the direction for payment at a time certain, and recourse is therefore had to the corpus by sale or mortgage. But even if a definite time of payment be not an ingredient in the case, yet from the very nature of portions, as rents and profits without stint represent the whole estate, the Court assumes the jurisdiction of ordering a sale or mortgage (c); and where there is no suit pending the trustees of an estate subject to such a charge may sell or mortgage, if they can find a purchaser or mortgagee, without the intervention of the Court (d).

Out of annual rents only.

5. If, however, the clear intention be that annual rents and profits only are meant, the Court cannot break in upon the corpus; and such is the case where the portions are directed to be raised expressly out of the annual rents (e); or where it is evident from the whole context that by rents and profits were intended the annual rents (a).

Out of rents or otherwise, except a sale.

6. In Bennett v. Wyndham (b), where the trust was to raise the charge out of the rents and profits, or by such other ways and means except a sale as the trustees should think proper, the Court on the one hand collected an intention that annual rents and profits were meant, and on the other hand that the tenants for life were not to be deprived of all usufructuary enjoyment, and the Court adopted a middle course by holding that part of the rents should be impounded and part be handed over to the tenants for life, and referred it to chambers to inquire what proportion of the rents ought to be impounded, and what to be paid to the tenant for life.

Mines and timber.

7. In Offley v. Offley (c) a term was created for raising 10,000*l.* for a daughter's portion, but the term was so short that the ordinary profits of the land would not raise above half the sum, There was an open coal mine in the land which the Court ordered to be wrought, with powers to the trustees to make soughs and drains as need should require, and Lord Commissioner Hutchins said that in such a case where the usual profits of the land would not raise the money appointed within the time, the Court might order timber to be felled off the land to make up the amount.

Out of rents by fixed annual payments.

8. If the trusts of a term be to "raise and levy from time to time a sum certain, by with and out of the rents and profits, by certain annual payments or sums in each year and not otherwise," the portional sum to be raised is a charge on the annual rents and profits generally, and the estate is not discharged at the expiration of six years, though the rents and profits during that period were sufficient to raise it (d).

Mortgage of undivided shares of the estate.

9. Where portions are raisable at different times as they are wanted, it is usual, as each portion is raised, not to mortgage the entire estate charged, but a proportional part only. Thus if the portional sum be 6,000*l.* divisible among three younger children, and secured by a term of 1,000 years, when the first 2,000*l.* is raised, the trustee of the term mortgages an undivided third part of the hereditaments comprised in the term, and when the second 2,000*l.* is raised, another undivided third part, and when the remaining 2,000*l.* is raised, the other undivided third part. The result of this is, that each mortgagee takes the legal estate in the subject of the mortgage, whereas if the entire estate had been comprised in the first mortgage, the two other securities would have been equitable, and exposed to all the consequent risks.

Custody of title deeds.

10. Trustees of a term of years for raising portions as between them and the freeholder are not entitled to the custody of the title deeds, and cannot deliver them to a mortgagee. But they and their mortgagees have a right in equity to the production of them for all necessary purposes (a).

CHAPTER XVIII.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR SALE (1).

THE subject of trusts for sale may be conveniently distributed under three heads: First, The general duties of trustees for sale; Secondly, The power of trustees to sign discharges for the purchase-money; and Thirdly, The disability of trustees to become purchasers of the trust property.

SECTION I.

THE GENERAL DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR SALE.

Trustees may sell without applying to the Court.

1. IT need scarcely be observed that trustees for sale where they are not parties to a suit, are authorised to enter into contracts without the previous sanction of the Court (a); but where a suit has been instituted for the execution of the trust, that attracts the jurisdiction of the Court, and the trustees would not be justified in proceeding to a sale without the Court's sanction (b). Private contracts, therefore, after the institution of a suit, can only be entered into by trustees subject to the approbation of the Court, and a condition is commonly annexed that the contract shall be null and void, unless the sanction of the Court be obtained within a limited period. Cases have occurred where, from accidental circumstances, the sanction has not been obtained within the time, and then by the death of the purchaser the contract has dropped to the ground, and the representatives of the purchaser have not felt themselves justified in renewing it. The better mode would be to give liberty to the purchaser at any time after the expiration of the limited period, but before any confirmation by the Court, to determine the contract (a).

Must consult the interest of the cestuis que trust.

2. A trustee for sale will remember that he is bound by his office to sell the estate under every possible advantage to his cestuis que trust (b), and in the case of several successive cestuis que trust, with a fair and impartial attention to the interests of all the parties concerned (c). Trustees, if they or those who act by their authority, fail in reasonable diligence in inviting competition (d), or in the management of the sale, as if they contract under circumstances of haste and improvidence, or contrive to advance the interests of one party at the expense of another, [or make a misstatement as to the condition of the property whereby a reduction of the contract price is necessitated (e)], will be personally responsible for the loss to the suffering party (f); and the Court, however correct the conduct of the purchaser, will refuse at his instance to compel the specific performance of the agreement (g). But if a trustee has once contracted to sell bonâ fide, a court of equity will not allow the contract to be invalidated because another person comes forward and is willing to give a higher price (h); and where there are two offers equally advantageous, one of which is preferred by a cestui que trust, it is not the duty of the trustees against their own opinion to accept the offer preferred by such cestui que trust (i).

Where sale is a breach of trust.

3. In no case will the Court enforce the specific performance of a contract which amounts to a breach of trust (j).

Cestuis que trust may contract conditionally.

4. The usual course is said to be for the cestuis que trust, who are the persons most interested in the matter, and who have the strongest motives for obtaining the highest possible price, to enter into a conditional contract, and then to obtain the assent of the trustee, who, when he has satisfied himself that the sum proposed is the value of the property, sanctions a sale which is beneficial to his cestuis que trust (a).

Valuation of the property.

5. A trustee for sale must inform himself of the real value of the property, and for that purpose, will, if necessary, employ some experienced person to furnish him with an estimate (b). If the property be sold at a grossly inadequate value, it is a breach of trust, which affects the title in the hands of the purchaser (c).

Each trustee responsible for the sale.

6. A trustee who takes no active part in the business cannot excuse himself by saying he had nothing to do with the conduct of the other to whom the management was confided; for where several trustees commit the entire administration of their trust to the hands of one, they are all equally responsible for the faithful discharge of their joint duty by that one whom they have substituted (d).

What time allowed for disposing of the estate.

7. The trustees will be allowed a reasonable time for disposing of an estate, and though the instrument creating the trust direct them to sell "with all convenient speed," that is no more than is implied by law, and does not render an immediate sale imperative (e). On the other hand, if the trust be to sell "at such time and in such manner as the trustees shall think fit," this will not authorise the trustees as between them and their cestuis que trust to postpone the sale arbitrarily to an indefinite period. The trustees cannot by such postponement vary the relative rights of the tenant for life and remaindermen, and so interfere with the settlor's intention (f). If trustees for a length of time, as for twenty years, neglect without any sufficient reason to sell, they will be answerable for any deprecation, and be decreed to account for interest instead of rents (a).

Trust to sell within a limited period.

8. If the trust be "with all convenient speed and within five years," to sell the estate and apply the funds in payment of debts, &c., the proviso as to the five years is considered as directory only, and the trustees can sell and make a good title after the lapse of that period. The Court could scarcely impute to the settlor the intention that the sale at the end of the five years should be made by the Court, which would be the case if the power in the trustees were extinguished (b).

[Cestuis que trust all sui juris.]

[9. A trust for sale is not put an end to by reason of all the persons beneficially interested becoming sui juris, for any one of the cestuis que trust has a right to insist on the trust being carried out, but if they all agree to take the property as realty, the trust for sale is extinguished (c).]

Trustees for sale may not grant leases.

10. In a case where the trustees had endeavoured for some time to sell, and not having succeeded, they agreed to execute a lease, the Court, on a bill filed by the trustees, to compel specific performance, refused to decree the lease, as the trust for sale did not primâ facie imply a power to grant leases (d). And so executors who are quasi trustees for sale, would, under special circumstances only, be justified in granting a lease (e); for such an act is not regularly within their province, and it is incumbent on the persons taking a lease from them to show that it was called for by the interests of the parties entitled to the property (f).

[May not give option to purchase.]

[11. And executors and administrators equally with trustees cannot bind the trust estate by a proviso in a lease that the lessee shall during the term have an option of purchasing the property at a fixed price (g); for it is the duty of the trustees to exercise their discretion at the time of sale as to whether the terms are in the circumstances as then existing beneficial to the cestuis que trust. And on the same principle a covenant by a trustee in a lease to renew on the payment of a fixed fine was held to be a breach of trust and not enforceable by the lessee (a).]

Trust for sale will not in general authorise a mortgage.

12. A trust for sale, if there be nothing to negative the settlor's intention to convert the estate absolutely, will not authorise the trustees to execute a mortgage (b). But where an estate is devised to trustees, charged with debts, and subject thereto, upon trust for certain parties, so that a sale, though it may be required, is not the testator's object, the trustees may, for the purpose of paying the debts, more properly mortgage than sell (c). [And a trustee and executor of a will containing no direct charge of debts, who is empowered to settle accounts, wind up the testator's affairs, and "make any sales or arrangements" which he judges expedient, can mortgage the real estate to raise money to meet pressing claims (d).] "A power of sale out and out," observed Lord St. Leonards, "for a purpose or with an object beyond the raising of a particular charge, does not authorise a mortgage: but where it is for raising a particular charge, and the estate is settled subject to that charge, then it may be proper, under the circumstances, to raise the money by mortgage, and the Court will support it as a conditional sale, as something within the power, and as a proper mode of raising the money" (e).

[Implied power to mortgage.]

[Trustees empowered to carry on the testator's business, and to "increase or diminish at their discretion the real or personal estate employed therein at his death," have not an implied power to create a mortgage for the discharge of business debts, paramount to an annuity, which is a first charge on the real and personal estate (f).]

Where the power is left to the discretion of the trustees the purchaser cannot question the exercise of the discretion.

13. A testator devised an estate to trustees upon trust to apply the rents for fifteen years in payment of incumbrances charged thereon, and if, for any reason whatever, in the opinion of the trustees a sale should become necessary, they were authorised to sell. The purchaser objected that the amount of the incumbrances would not justify a sale of the whole estate, but it was held that the power of sale depended on the opinion of the trustees, and the fact that they thought it necessary would be evidenced by the conveyance (a).

A trust to mortgage will not authorise a sale.

14. A trust to raise money by mortgage will not authorise a sale, though the latter may be more beneficial to the estate; and the Court itself has no jurisdiction to substitute a sale for a mortgage (b).

Powers of sale.

15. It was held by V. C. Kindersley, that in the absence of any special direction a mere power to mortgage does not authorise a mortgage with a power of sale, since how can a trustee who has not in himself even any power to sell give authority to another to sell (c)? But according to V. C. Malins a direction to trustees to raise money "by mortgage in such manner as they may think fit," authorises a mortgage with a power of sale (d), and according to Lord Romilly, M.R., a power to raise money by sale or mortgage justifies a mortgage with a power of sale (e). There is no doubt a conflict of authority. If a mortgage per se does not imply a power of sale, a direction to sell or mortgage will not carry the matter further, for the trustee has no power to delegate his authority to sell, and if the broad general principle be adopted that the power of sale is an ordinary incident to the mortgage, the logical result would be that a power of mortgaging alone authorises a mortgage with a power of sale. Of course where the Court has jurisdiction to raise money out of an estate, as for payment of debts, it may either direct a sale, or a mortgage with a power of sale (f), and an executor is, for the purposes of paying debts, regarded as the absolute owner, and may therefore either sell or mortgage or give a mortgage with a power of sale (g). [Since the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (h), under which mortgagees, where the mortgage is made by deed, have by virtue of the Act a power of sale vested in them, the point has become practically unimportant; but it is conceived that, as by the 66th section of the Act, a power of sale in the form contained in the Act is in effect declared to be a proper power to be contained in a mortgage deed, it cannot be contended that a power to mortgage does not now authorise the insertion of a power of sale in the mortgage deed.]

Sale of equity of redemption.

16. If an equity of redemption be vested in trustees for sale with a direction to apply the proceeds in discharge of the mortgage and pay the balance to the settlor, the trustees, notwithstanding the direction to discharge the mortgage, may sell subject to it (a).

A power of sale will not authorise a partition.

17. A power to trustees to sell will not authorise a partition, and it was long considered doubtful whether a power to sell and exchange would do so (b), [but it has recently been decided that under the usual power of sale or exchange a partition can be effected (c), and this decision is not likely to be disturbed.

Effect of usual power of sale in settlements.

18. Prior to the Settled Land Act, 1882,] in settlements of real estate a power of sale was usually given to trustees, to be exercised with the consent of the tenant for life, with a direction to lay out the proceeds, with all convenient speed, in another purchase, and in the meantime to invest them upon some proper security. For determining upon what occasions the trustees would be justified in proceeding to a sale, it will be proper to notice, in the words of Lord Eldon, the intention of the settlement in so framing the power:—"The object of the sale," he said, "must be to invest the money in the purchase of another estate, to be settled to the same uses, and the trustees are not to be satisfied with probability upon that, but it ought to be with reference to an object at that time supposed practicable, or, at least, this Court would expect some strong purpose of family prudence justifying the conversion, if it is likely to continue money" (d). Sir W. Grant is said to have concurred in the same sentiments (e), so that clearly the trustees as between them and their cestuis que trust would not be justified in selling to gratify the caprice or promote the exclusive interest of the tenant for life. It might happen that particular circumstances might call for an immediate sale, as where an extremely advantageous offer is made, or there is a prospect of great deterioration by abstaining from exercising the power; but, generally speaking, the trustees ought not to convert the estate without having another purchase in view, and then not for the mere purpose of conversion, but in the honest exercise of their discretion, for the benefit of all parties claiming under the settlement (a). The power of investing the proceeds upon some security in the meantime was not meant to authorise the continuance of the property as money, but only to meet the exigencies of particular circumstances, as where the trustees are disappointed of the contemplated new purchase, or the state of the title to the new purchase leads to necessary delay.

Effect of the Drainage Acts.

19. It is also to be noticed where the lands have been charged by the tenant for life under the Drainage Acts, that as the sale can only be made subject to the charge, the exercise of the power will confer a benefit on the tenant for life, for before the sale he is bound by the Acts to pay not only the interest on the charge, but also part of the principal, but after the sale he becomes under the settlement tenant for life of the whole proceeds.

[At the request and by the direction of tenant for life.]

[20. Where the power of sale was given to the trustees "at the request and by the direction of" the tenant for life, the Court refused to restrain a sale although no immediate reinvestment was contemplated, being of opinion that the tenant for life had a right to call upon the trustees to sell, and that they had no right to refuse his request (b).

[Settled Land Act.]

21. Under the Settled Land Act, 1882, the power of sale is given to the tenant for life, and may be exercised by him without reference to any prospective reinvestment of the purchase-money in the purchase of another estate. In fact there is no restriction whatever in the Act on his power of sale, which, subject to the giving of certain notices (c), may be exercised by him, on any grounds which he thinks sufficient, without any liability on his part, to justify the grounds, and without any power in the trustees of the settlement or in the Court to interfere with his power of sale so long as the same is honestly and properly exercised (a). It must however be borne in mind that the tenant for life is under the 53rd section "in relation to the exercise of any power under the Act, to be deemed in the position and to have the duties and liabilities of a trustee for all parties entitled under the settlement," and it is conceived that the effect of this is to put the tenant for life in the position of a trustee with a power of sale exercisable in all respects at his absolute discretion, and to make the exercise of the power subject to the control of the Court in all cases in which the tenant for life is influenced by dishonest or improper motives (b).

[Power of sale in settlement not now necessary.]

The result of the late Act is that it is now unnecessary and unadvisable to insert a power of sale in a family settlement of real estate; but the powers arising under the Act, which are sufficient for any ordinary case, should be relied on (c).

[Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886.]

22. Under the Extraordinary Tithe Redemption Act, 1886, a tenant for life of land subject to an extraordinary charge or a rent-charge under the Act may sell the land or any part thereof, or any land settled to or on the like uses or trusts, and apply the proceeds in or towards redemption of the charge (d).

[Sale with consent.]

23. Where trustees were empowered to sell and enfranchise with the consent of the person for the time being entitled as beneficial tenant for life, and the will contained a direction that no repurchase or reinvestment should be made while there should be any person entitled as beneficial tenant for life or tenant in tail in possession and of the age of twenty-one years, without the previous consent of such person, it was held that the trustees could during the infancy of a tenant in tail in possession make a good title under the power (e).]

Sale at request of a party.

Trustees for sale at the request and by the direction of another party, to be testified in writing, &c., cannot obtain a decree for specific performance without first proving that the contract was entered into at such request and by such direction, and that such request and direction have, either before or since the contract, been testified by the requisite writing (a). Nor if trustees have a power of selling or leasing at the written request of another, will the Court enforce a contract without such request, though it is alleged that there was part performance by the trustees and by the person whose request was necessary, and that it is therefore a case where a mere parol contract is sufficient (b).

[Deferred power of sale.]

[24. Where trustees, who had no power of sale until the death of an existing tenant for life, entered into a contract for sale, the purchaser was justified in objecting to the title, and could not be compelled to carry out the sale by entering into a new contract with the tenant for life under the powers of the Settled Land Acts (c). And in a similar case where, after the time for completion had expired, and the contract had been repudiated by the purchaser, the trustees offered to procure the concurrence of the beneficiaries, it was held that such offer came too late (d)].

[Concurrence of beneficiaries.]

Trustees for sale of a limited interest in an estate or of an aliquot part of an estate.

25. If an estate be vested in trustees upon trust for A. for life, and on the decease of A. to sell, the trustees have no power to sell during the life of A., however beneficial it may be to the parties interested in the trust (e). But if an estate be devised to A. for life, and after her decease to trustees upon trust to sell "as soon as conveniently may be after the testator's decease," the trustees, with the concurrence of A., can make a good title (f); and if the tenant for life and the trustees in remainder sell for one entire sum, it has been held that the purchaser will get a good title, and the tenant for life and the trustees may agree amongst themselves how the purchase-money is to be apportioned, or if they cannot agree it will be apportioned by the Court (g); [and the same principle was applied where the trustees of a reversion expectant on a lease concurred with the owner of the lease in selling the fee (a).] And generally trustees for sale of any aliquot part of an estate may join in a sale of the whole estate for one entire sum, and the purchase-money, as amongst the respective owners, may be left to be apportioned as before (b); [and by sec. 35 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (c), where a trust for sale or power of sale created by an instrument coming into operation after the 31st of December, 1881, is vested in trustees, they may, in the absence of the expression of a contrary intention, concur with any other person in selling all or any part of the property.] Where a testator's estate was under administration by the Court, and a house, part of that estate, was put up for sale with another house which was comprised in the testator's marriage settlement, in one lot, and the trustees of the settlement had leave to attend, it was held that as the sale of the entirety was beneficial, a good title could be made, and that the purchase-money could be apportioned in chambers (d). But a purchaser cannot be compelled to accept such a title if the separate interests of the cestuis que trust in such a joint sale be not brought to the sale with every advantage, or if the nature of the case be such that the purchase-money will not admit of apportionment upon any intelligible principle (e).

Trust for sale survives.

26. Where an estate is vested in several trustees upon trust to raise a sum by sale or mortgage, and one of the trustees dies, the survivors or survivor may sell or mortgage, unless there be words in the settlement which expressly declare that the trust shall not be exercised by the survivors or survivor, for the execution of a trust is not regarded in the same light as that of a power; but the presumption is that, as the estate, so the discretionary part of the trust passes to the survivors or survivor (f). The objection is sometimes taken that where there is a power of appointment of new trustees, and one of the trustees has died and a new trustee has not been substituted, the survivor is incompetent to execute a valid conveyance. But though a proviso for appointment of new trustees may certainly be so framed that the execution of the trust should, until a new trustee has been substituted, remain in suspense (a), yet the clause, as usually penned in settlements [and as framed in the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 31], is considered by the Courts to be merely of a directory character (b).

Power of sale in a mortgage.

27. In a mortgage to two persons to secure a joint advance with a power of sale to "them, their heirs and assigns," if one dies, the survivor may sell (c); and in a mortgage to A. in fee, with a power of sale to him, "his heirs, executors, administrators or assigns," the administrator of the assign of A., though the legal estate of the lands be not in himself, but in a trustee for him under a conveyance from the heir of the assign, is, together with such trustee, an assign within the meaning of the power, and can therefore sell (d). And it does not vitiate the sale, that part of the purchase-money is left on mortgage of the estate, but the mortgagee is answerable for the whole amount to the mortgagor (e).

23 & 24 Vict. c. 145.

28. By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, as to mortgages by deed created since 28th August, 1860, and where the security does not speak to the contrary, any mortgagee, though his security contain no power of sale, may, when the principal sum has been in arrear for twelve months, or the interest for six months, or there has been any default by the mortgagor in insuring, proceed to a sale, after six months' notice, and sign a valid receipt for the purchase-money (f). [But this has been repealed as to instruments executed after the 31st of December, 1881, and its place supplied as to such instruments by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, which gives to mortgagees of property generally, whether real or personal, where the mortgage is by deed, and no contrary intention is expressed in the instrument, power to sell the mortgaged property when the mortgage money has become due; but the power is not to be exercised unless and until—

(3) There has been a breach on the part of the mortgagor of some provision contained in the mortgage deed or in the Act other than and besides a covenant for payment of the mortgage money or interest thereon (a).]

Trustees must show a good title.

29. As a trustee, like any ordinary vendor, is bound to make the purchaser a good title (b), it would be prudent before proceeding to the execution of the trust, to take the opinion of counsel whether a good title can be deduced. Should the contract for sale be unconditional and the title prove bad, the purchaser in a suit for specific performance would have his costs against the trustee (c), though the trustee, where his conduct was excusable, might charge them upon the trust estate under the head of expenses.

Timber.

30. If trustees have a power of sale only, they cannot sell the estate separate from the timber standing upon it, though the tenant for life be without impeachment of waste, and might have cut the timber previously to the sale; and a sale so effected is absolutely void (d), unless it be effected subsequently to 13th August, 1859, when it may be confirmed under the provisions of a legislative enactment in that behalf (e).

Minerals.

31. It is conceived that no distinction exists between timber and minerals, for both until severed form an integral part of the property. And it was accordingly, before the late Act, decided that the surface could not be sold apart from the minerals (f). But now, by 25 & 26 Vict. c. 108, trustees and other persons (g)

[Sale of land without minerals under Settled Land Act, 1882.]

[32. In the case of a sale by the tenant for life under the Settled Land Act, 1882, the sale may be made either of land with or without an exception or reservation of all or any of the mines and minerals therein, or of any mines and minerals, and in any such case with or without a grant or reservation of powers of working, wayleaves or rights of way, rights of water and drainage, and other powers, easements, rights and privileges for or incident to or connected with mining purposes, in relation to the settled land, or any other land (b). During the minority of the tenant for life, or person having the powers of a tenant for life, this power may be exercised by the persons who are trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Act, if any, and if there are none then by such persons as the Court may direct (c).]

Where the estate is settled the timber cannot be sold separately.

33. If lands be devised to trustees in trust to sell for payment of debts, and, subject to that charge, are given to A. for life without impeachment of waste, with remainders over, the trustees must not raise the money by a sale of timber, which would be a hardship on the tenant for life, but by a sale of part of the estate itself; and should they have improperly resorted to a fall of timber, the tenant for life would have a charge upon the lands to the amount of the proceeds (d).

[Trustees of personal estate, whose trust authorises them to call in the trust property, and invest the proceeds and vary the investments, have an implied power of sale over real estate covenanted to be settled upon similar trusts (b).]

Sale may be by private contract or by auction.

35. The sale may be conducted by public auction or private contract, as the one or the other mode may be most advantageous, according to the circumstances of the case (c), and of course it is not an essential preliminary to a sale by private contract that the trustees should have previously attempted a sale by auction, or even have inserted a public advertisement that the property was for sale (d). And it was held under the old Insolvent Debtors Act, 7 Geo. 4, c. 57, s. 20, directing a sale by auction, that the assignees of the insolvent might sell a real estate by private contract, after an ineffectual attempt to dispose of it by auction (e). And, again, though the subsequent Insolvent Debtors' Act, 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 47, directed the assignees of insolvents to sell "in such manner" as the major part, in value, of the creditors should direct, yet in a case where the creditors resolved that there should be a reserved bidding of 325*l.*, and the assignees sold by auction for 310*l.*, it was held that the clause was merely directory, and that the deviation from the resolution of the creditors did not, therefore, vitiate the sale (f).

Sale must not be delegated.

36. The trustee cannot without responsibility delegate the trust for sale (g); but there seems to be no objection to the employment of agents by him, where such a course is conformable to the common usage of business, and the trustee acts as prudently for the cestuis que trust as he would have done for himself (a). But an agent for sale must not be allowed to receive the purchase-money (b); [and an agent should not be employed to do anything out of the ordinary scope of his business; and it has been held that the trustee's solicitor ought not to choose the valuer, as the choice is a matter on which the discretion of the trustee should be exercised (c).]

If the sale be by auction, proper advertisements must be given.

37. If the trustee think a sale by auction the more eligible mode, he must see that all proper advertisements are made, and due notice given. It was ruled in an old case (d) that a cestui que trust could not, by alleging the want of these preliminary steps, obtain an injunction against the sale; for the trustee being personally responsible to the cestui que trust for any consequential damage, the Court, it was said, could not regard it as a case of irreparable injury. But in more recent cases an injunction has been granted, it being the clear duty of the trustee to procure for the cestuis que trust the most advantageous sale (e).

[Prior charges.]

[38. By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, as to trusts or powers created since 31st December, 1881, and unless the settlement otherwise directs, a trustee may sell, or concur in selling, all or any part of the property either subject to prior charges or not (f).]

Conditions of sale.

39. A trustee may sell subject to any reasonable conditions of sale (g), but would not be justified in clogging the property with restrictions that were evidently uncalled for by the state of the title (h). [Prior to the recent enactments it was] usual, in penning a trust for sale, to give express authority to the trustees to insert special conditions of sale; [but] as to trusts created after 28th August, 1860, and where the settlement did not otherwise direct, trustees [were authorised by Lord Cranworth's] Act to insert such special or other stipulations, either as to title or evidence of title or otherwise, as they might think fit (a). [This enactment has since been repealed (b), but its place had been previously supplied by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 35, which provides that, as to trusts for sale and powers of sale created by instruments coming into operation after the 31st day of December, 1881, trustees may, unless the instrument creating the trust or power otherwise provides, sell or concur with any other persons in selling, subject to any such conditions respecting title and evidence of title or other matter, as they think fit (c).] But still this would be no warrant for the introduction of stipulations which are plainly not rendered necessary by the state of the title, and are calculated to damp the success of the sale; [as, for instance, a condition limiting the commencement of the title to a recent date where there is no difficulty in giving the earlier title and no special advantage in withholding it, or a condition making all recitals in the abstracted documents conclusive evidence of the matters recited, or a condition that the property is sold subject to the existing tenancies, restrictive covenants, and other incidents of tenure (if any) when there are no such tenancies or covenants (d), but the opinion was expressed that a condition limiting the title to ten years in a case where the land was broken up into small lots, and the condition was inserted for the purpose of saving expense, was reasonable and proper under special circumstances (e). And] trustees would, it is conceived, be justified in inserting a condition, now not uncommon, empowering the vendor, if unable, or unwilling, for reasonable cause, to remove the purchaser's objection, to cancel the contract. Such a condition may be depreciatory at the sale itself, and yet beneficial in its results (f).

of the trustees, to enforce the contract against the purchaser (a) ;

[Trustee Act, 1888.] but in future, by virtue of the provisions of the Trustee Act, 1888 (b), upon any sale made by a trustee, no purchaser will be at liberty to make any objection against the title upon the ground that the conditions of sale were depreciatory. It is further enacted (c) that "no sale made by a trustee shall be impeached by any cestui que trust upon the ground that any of the conditions, subject to which the sale was made, may have been unnecessarily depreciatory, unless it shall also appear that the consideration for the sale was thereby rendered inadequate;" and in favour of purchasers; there is a further provision that after the execution of the conveyance no sale shall be impeached upon the like ground, "unless it shall appear that the purchaser was acting in collusion" with the trustee at the time when the contract for such sale was made.

[51 & 52 Vict. c. 59.] 41. As a tenant for life selling under the powers of the Settled Land Act, 1882, is by sect. 53, in relation to the exercise of the power to have the duties and liabilities of a trustee, it is conceived that the same rules with regard to depreciatory conditions apply to him as to any other trustee.]

Selling in lots. 42. There is no rule to prevent the trustees from selling in lots, should the auctioneer or other experienced person recommend it as the most advisable course (d), and this liberty is now given by express enactment as to trusts created since 28th August, 1860, where the settlement does not direct the contrary (e).

[Cheque for deposit.] [43. A trustee or mortgagee is justified, on the sale of a property of large value, in allowing the custom of auctioneers to accept a cheque in lieu of cash for the deposit to be acted upon, and will not be held guilty of negligence if the cheque be dishonoured (f).]

upon a re-sale there was a gain upon one lot and a loss upon the other, the balance upon the whole being in favour of the estate, Lord Eldon compelled the assignees to account for the diminution of price on the one lot, and would not allow them to set off the increase of price on the other lot (a).

It may be thought perhaps that as trustees in bankruptcy act under a statute they have less discretionary power than belongs to ordinary trustees; but in Taylor v. Tabrum (b) the same principle was applied to trustees in the proper sense of the word.

By 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, as to trusts created [after 28th August, 1860, and prior to the repeal of the Act,] and where the settlement does not otherwise direct, trustees may sell at one time or at several times, and may buy in, or rescind a private contract, and resell without being responsible (c).

[By a later Act as to trusts or powers created since 31st December, 1881, where the settlement does not otherwise direct, trustees may "vary any contract for sale," and may "buy in at any auction or rescind any contract for sale and resell without being answerable for any loss" (d).]

45. By the Vendor and Purchaser Act, 1874 (e), it is enacted, by the first section, that as to any contract "made after 31*st December*, 1874, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary, forty years shall be substituted as the period of commencement of title which a purchaser may require in place of sixty years, the present period of such commencement; nevertheless earlier title than forty years may be required in cases similar to those in which earlier title than sixty years may now be required." 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78.

And the second section (as to any contract made after 31*st December*, 1874, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary), enacts—

(1) That "under a contract to grant or assign a term of years, whether derived or to be derived out of a freehold or leasehold estate, the intended lessee or assign shall not be entitled to call for the title to the freehold" (f).

[(f) By section 4, sub-s. 2 of the Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), the benefit of this provision is now in effect extended to trustees lending upon security of leaseholds, see ante, p. 360.]

(2) That recitals, statements and descriptions of facts, matters, and parties in instruments twenty years old "shall, unless and except so far as they shall be proved to be inaccurate, be taken to be sufficient evidence of the truths of such facts, matters and descriptions."

(3) That "the inability of the vendor to furnish the purchaser with a legal covenant" for production of documents shall not be an objection to the title, if "the purchaser will, on completion of the contract, have an equitable right to the production."

(4) That "such covenants for production as the purchaser can and shall require, shall be furnished at his expense, and the vendor shall bear the expense of perusal and execution on behalf of and by himself, and on behalf of and by necessary parties other than the purchaser."

(5) That "where the vendor retains any part of an estate to which any documents of title relate, he shall be entitled to retain such documents."

By the third section, it is enacted that "trustees who are either vendors or purchasers may sell or buy without excluding the operation of the second section."

This express reference to the second section, suggests a doubt whether by implication trustees were meant to be excluded from the benefit of the first section. It is conceived, however, that no such distinction was intended, and that trustees who buy or sell may take advantage of the general enactment contained in the first section.

[46. The 3rd section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, enacts (as to any sale made after the 31st December, 1881, and subject to any stipulation to the contrary in the contract of sale)—

(1) That "under a contract to sell and assign a term of years derived out of a leasehold interest in land, the intended assign shall not have the right to call for the title to the leasehold reversion."

(2) That "where land of copyhold or customary tenure has been converted into freehold by enfranchisement, then under a contract to sell and convey the freehold, the purchaser shall not have the right to call for the title to make the enfranchisement."

(3) That a purchaser shall not require the production, or any abstract or copy of any document "dated or made before the time prescribed by law, or stipulated for commencement of the title, even though the same creates a power subsequently exercised" by an abstracted instrument, or "require any information or make any requisition, objection, or inquiry with respect to any such deed, will or document, or the title prior to that time, notwithstanding that any such deed, will or other document, or that prior title is recited, covenanted to be produced or noticed; and he shall assume, unless the contrary appears, that the recitals, contained in the abstracted instruments, of any document forming part of that prior title are correct, and give all the material contents of the document so recited, and that every document so recited was duly executed by all necessary parties, and perfected if and as required by fine, recovery, acknowledgment, inrolment or otherwise." [44 & 45 Vict. c. 41.]

(4) That "where land sold is held by lease (not including underlease), the purchaser shall assume, unless the contrary appears, that the lease was duly granted; and on production of the receipt for the last payment due for rent under the lease before the date of actual completion of the purchase, he shall assume, unless the contrary appears, that all the covenants and provisions of the lease have been duly performed and observed up to the date of actual completion."

(5) That "where land sold is held by under-lease, the purchaser shall assume, unless the contrary appears, that the under-lease and every superior lease were duly granted; and, on production of the receipt for the last payment due for rent under the under-lease before the date of actual completion of the purchase, he shall assume, unless the contrary appears, that all the covenants and provisions of the under-lease have been duly performed and observed up to the date of actual completion of the purchase, and further that all rent due under every superior lease, and all the covenants and provisions of every superior lease, have been paid and duly performed and observed up to that date."

(6) That "on a sale of any property, the expenses of the production and inspection of all documents, not in the vendor's possession, and the expenses of all journeys incidental to such production or inspection, and the expenses of searching for, procuring, making, verifying and producing all certificates, declarations, evidences and information not in the vendor's possession, and all copies or abstracts of, or extracts from, any documents not in the vendor's possession," if required by a purchaser for any purpose, shall be borne by him (a); "and where the vendor

[(a) It was held by Pearson, J., that under this section the purchaser must bear the expense of procuring and making an abstract of any deed not in retains possession of any document, the expenses of making any copy thereof, attested or unattested, which a purchaser requires to be delivered to him, shall be borne by that purchaser."

(7) That "on a sale of any property in lots, a purchaser of two or more lots, held wholly or partly under the same title, shall not have a right to more than one abstract of the common title, except at his own expense."

And by the 13th section, "on a contract to grant a lease for a term of years, to be derived out of a leasehold interest with a leasehold reversion, the intended lessee shall not have the right to call for the title to that reversion."

And by the 66th section, trustees and their solicitors are exonerated from all liability for omitting to exclude the application of the above-mentioned stipulations to any contract they may enter into, but nothing in the Act is to make the adoption in connection with any contract of any further or other stipulations improper.]

Clearing the title.

47. Trustees for sale may do all reasonable acts which they are professionally advised are proper for the purpose of clearing the title and completing the sale (a).

Succession duty.

48. Trustees for sale who are to stand possessed of the proceeds upon trust for one person for life with remainder to another, can, whether the power of sale be or not exercisable with the consent of the tenant for life or of the successor, i.e., the remainderman, give a good title to the purchaser free from succession duty; for the duty attaches on the interest of the successor, i.e., the money in the hands of the trustees who are responsible, and the sale is by a title which is paramount to the successor's interest; and if the sale is to be by consent, the power of selling free from the duty is by the Act not to be thereby prejudiced (b). So trustees for sale who are to stand possessed of the proceeds to pay legacies the vendor's possession of which he requires an abstract, even though it forms part of the title which the vendor is bound to adduce, and the vendor is in a position to compel its production; but this construction of the section was overruled by the Court of Appeal, and it was held that the Act does not relieve the vendor from the obligation to furnish the purchaser with a proper abstract of title, either for the statutory period or for such period as may be agreed upon, but the section proceeds upon the assumption that such an abstract has been furnished, Re Johnson and Tustin, 28 Ch. D. 84; 30 Ch. Div. 42.]

can pass the estate free from duty, for the succession duty does not attach where legacy duty is payable (a), and the legacy duty is not a charge on the estate, but is payable in respect of the proceeds in the hands of the trustees (b).

Hardship.

49. The Court will not enforce a contract against trustees where it presses with extreme hardship. Thus, where trustees, not being apprised of the real amount of the incumbrances upon an estate, entered into a personal engagement with the purchaser to clear off all incumbrances, the Court would not compel the trustees to fulfil their contract, but left the parties to law (c), and the bill was dismissed without costs (d).

Letting into possession.

50. The purchaser, after the contract, should not be let into possession of the estate until the completion of the sale by payment of the full purchase-money (e).

Of "granting" in the operative part of the conveyance.

51. Formerly, in drawing the conveyance, the word "grant" being commonly (though erroneously) supposed to contain a warranty (f), the trustee, instead of "granting, bargaining, selling, and releasing," was often, from extra caution, made to "bargain, sell, and release," with the omission of the word "grant" (g). And more recently, in order to secure the trustees from the possibility of parting with any interest vested in them beneficially, or from being construed to guarantee anything beyond the powers of their trust, it has not been unusual to insert in the operative part of the instrument the words "according to their estate and interest as such trustees." [And now, since the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (h), the words "as trustees" are inserted in order that the covenants against incumbrances may be implied in the conveyance.]

Covenants.

52. A trustee cannot be compelled to enter into any other covenant for title than against incumbrances by his own acts (i). But it would be prudent in trustees to apprise the public that they sell in that character, that the purchaser may not say he was led to suppose from the advertisements of sale, that the vendors were the beneficial proprietors, and that the contract must, therefore, draw with it the usual incidents, and that the purchaser ought to have the benefit of the ordinary covenants. If the trust for sale is to be exercised with the consent [or at the request] of the tenant for life who joins in a sale, he must enter into the usual covenants for title (a).

Mortgagees' covenants.

53. Mortgagees with a power of sale are regarded as trustees, and covenant only against their own acts (b). To the extent of their mortgage money they are beneficially interested, not however as owners of the estate, but only as incumbrancers entitled to a charge.

[Conveyancing Act, 1881.]

[54. By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 7, where, in any conveyance made after the 31st December, 1881, any person conveys, and is expressed to convey, as trustee or mortgagee, or as personal representative of a deceased person, or as committee of a lunatic so found by inquisition, or under an order of the Court, a covenant against incumbrances by such person in the form stated in the Act is to be deemed to be included in the conveyance, and is by virtue of the Act to be implied, but such covenant is not to be implied unless the person so conveying is in the conveyance expressed to convey in one of the above capacities.

The benefit of the covenant so implied is to be annexed to and go with the estate of the implied covenantee. A covenant so implied may be varied or extended by deed.]

Attested copies and covenant for production.

55. It was laid down by Lord Eldon, that assignees of bankrupts were bound, in case they could not deliver up the title deeds, to furnish the purchaser with attested copies and to covenant for production of the originals, the covenant to be confined to the period during which the assignees should continue where a lessor grants a lease with a covenant for perpetual renewal, devisees in trust of the lessor, though bound to grant a new lease, are not bound to enter into a similar covenant. In these cases the court has, in order to secure the lessee without making the trustees personally liable, declared the right of the lessee to a perpetual renewal, and directed the new lease to contain a recital of the old lease, and of the declaration of the Court in obedience to which the trustees purport to demise; Copper Mining Company v. Beach, 13 Beav. 478; Hodges v. Blagrave, 18 Beav. 405. So, if A. agrees to grant a lease to B. and B. dies, A. can compel the executors of B. to accept the lease, but the lease is so framed that the executors of B. are guarded against all personal liability; Phillips v. Everard, 5 Sim. 102; Stephens v. Hotham, 1 K. & J. 571; but in the latter case the V. C. added that if the lease were a beneficial lease claimed by the executors, that would be a different case, and they must enter into full covenants, p. 580; and see Staines v. Morris, 1 V. & B. 12.

in office (a). And trustees, where they retain the title deeds, are equally required to give attested copies, and [either to] covenant for production during the period of their own custody, giving at the same time all such right at law or in equity as they lawfully can to call for the production as against the holder for the time being (b), [or else to give a statutory acknowledgment under the recent Act.] It is not easy to suggest a case where upon a sale by trustees the purchaser would not be entitled in equity (which would be sufficient) to call for the production of the deeds, but should there occur a case where the purchaser would not have such a right either at law or in equity, he could not be compelled to complete, but might claim to be discharged from his contract and be paid his costs, which would fall upon the trust estate or the trustees personally, according to the propriety or impropriety of their conduct in proceeding to a sale without guarding themselves by an express condition.

[Statutory acknowledgment.]

[56. Under the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (c), sect. 9, the practice has been introduced of giving an acknowledgment in writing of the right of the purchaser to the production of the documents of title, and to delivery of copies thereof in lieu of the old covenant for production, and with reference to this acknowledgment the following points are noticeable :—

(1) The person who "retains possession of the documents" (by which, apparently, is meant the person who has the documents in his possession, or under his control), and he only can give the statutory acknowledgment.

(2) The acknowledgment binds the documents in the possession or under the control of every person, who from time to time has such possession or control, but binds the "individual possessor or person so long only as he has possession or control thereof."

(3) The acknowledgment does not confer any right to damages for loss or destruction of or injury to the documents from whatever cause arising.

(4) The acknowledgment satisfies any liability to give a covenant for production and delivery of copies of or extracts from documents.

acknowledgment correspond with those which arose under the old qualified covenant for production usually entered into by trustees independently of the Act, and it is conceived that trustees may safely give the acknowledgment for documents in their possession, and that they cannot be required to do more than give this acknowledgment.

[Statutory undertaking.]

57. The same section has introduced the practice of giving an undertaking in writing for safe custody of the documents retained, which "imposes on the person giving it and on every person having possession or control of the documents from time to time, but on each individual possessor or person so long only as he has possession or control thereof, an obligation to keep the documents safe, whole, uncancelled, and undefaced, unless prevented from so doing by fire or other inevitable accident," and under this, trustees who have the custody of documents as to which a former holder has given the statutory undertaking will be personally liable for their safe custody, but it is conceived that they will, in the absence of neglect on their part, be entitled to be recouped out of their trust estate any loss they may suffer in respect of the documents.

The undertaking for safe custody involves a personal liability which trustees are not by law bound to take upon themselves and they should accordingly decline to give the statutory undertaking when retaining the possession of documents.]

Sale of leaseholds.

58. In a sale of leaseholds by trustees who take by assignment, they cannot, in any case, require from a purchaser a covenant of indemnity against a breach of the covenants; for, as regards themselves, they took the lease by assignment without personally covenanting, and therefore cease to be liable on the assignment over; and, as regards a covenant for the protection of the settlor, he has become a stranger by the execution of the trust deed, and the trustees could neither, in the absence of an express stipulation, insist upon a benefit to one with whom there is no existing privity, nor, as they are bound to make the sale the most beneficial to the cestuis que trust, could they insert a condition in favour of a stranger which might operate as a discouragement to purchasers (a).

Executor of lessee.

59. The executor of a lessee upon assigning the term would be entitled to such a covenant, his testator's estate being liable under the original covenants of his testator.

Practice of the Court.

60. Subject to the effect of the Act to be mentioned presently, where a lessee's estate is in course of distribution under the direction of the Court, a portion of the estate is usually reserved for the purpose of forming an indemnity fund against the covenants of the lease (a), unless the risk be inconsiderable (b). But no indemnity is provided where the testator's estate is not liable, as where the testator himself was not a lessee, but the assignee of a lease, and had entered into no covenants (c). And if the executor has assented to the bequest unconditionally, he is held to have waived his claim to indemnity (d).

Principle of practice.

It is difficult to say upon what principle this practice of the Court is based. In some of the older cases the judges seem to have thought that it was to indemnify the executor. But as the distribution of the assets is made by the Court, and is not the act of the executor, it is impossible to maintain that the executor can be personally liable for the debt. In other cases the fund is said to be set apart out of regard to the interests of the lessor. But if the lessor can prove by way of claim in the suit, why should the Court protect one who will not protect himself; and if he cannot prove in the suit (e), it seems anomalous that the Court, while it refuses to hear the lessor on the subject of his interest, should deal with the assets behind his back in respect of such interest. The whole doctrine, said V. C. Kindersley, is in a very unsatisfactory state, and does not seem to be founded on sound principle (f).

22 & 23 Vict. c. 35.

By Lord St. Leonards' Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 27), where an executor has satisfied all accrued liabilities under a lease, and has set apart a fund to answer covenants for expenditure of fixed sums on the property (which would not include rents) and assigns the lease to a purchaser, he may distribute the assets without being personally liable to the lessor, who however may still follow the assets in the hands of the recipients.

Practice since the Act.

The practice of the Court for the future has not been settled (g), but it is presumed that where a lease is sold under the direction of the Court, and all existing liabilities have been satisfied, and provision made for future fixed sums covenanted to be laid out on the property, the Court will not think it necessary to protect a lessor, who, as the legislature has now pronounced, cannot under such circumstances claim protection out of Court. In other cases the law will remain as it was, and the general principle would appear to be, that the Court should (not by way of indemnity to the executor, except as to costs of resisting proceedings against him, but ex debito justitiæ to a bonâ fide future creditor) set apart a fund where it plainly appears that future liabilities will arise, and that the whole estate itself is not a sufficient security, and the devisee of the lease cannot give adequate security either by personal undertaking or otherwise. [And in recent cases, both in England (a) and in Ireland (b), the Court has refused to set aside any part of the assets, or to give the executor any further indemnity than that which arises by reason of the administration of the estate by the Court. But where the estate consists to an appreciable extent of leaseholds, which involve a liability in the executor, he is entitled as of right to have the estate administered by the Court for his protection (c).]

Assignment of a chose in action.

61. In the assignment of a chose in action [not falling within sect. 25 of the Judicature Act, 1873,] the trustee may be required to give a power of attorney to receive the money, and to sue in his name, but this should be accompanied by a proviso that no action or suit shall be commenced unless the assignor consent, or unless the assignee tender a sufficient indemnity (d). [But in the case of an absolute assignment by writing within sect. 25, as the assignee can, by giving notice under the Act, acquire the right to sue at law in his own name for the chose in action, it is conceived that a trustee could not be compelled to give such a power of attorney.]

the necessity of procuring the mortgagor's consent to the sale (a).

Whether the cestuis que trust should be parties.

63. If the trustees have a power of signing discharges for the purchase-money, the cestuis que trust need not be made parties to the conveyance (b); but as trustees are bound to covenant against their own incumbrances only, the cestuis que trust, where it is practicable, are usually made parties to the deed, that the purchaser may have the benefit of their covenants for title according to the extent of their respective interests (c). In sales, however, under the direction of the Court of Chancery, it is the rule not to make the cestuis que trust parties; for this would involve the necessity of previously inquiring who are beneficially interested, and in what proportions, whereas it is a common proceeding of the Court to order a sale in the first instance, and leave the rights of the respective parties to be settled by a subsequent adjudication (d).

[64. The question has arisen whether trustees having a power of sale, and enabled by the recent enactments or otherwise to give a complete discharge for purchase-money, are persons "absolutely entitled" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, s. 69, so as to give the Court jurisdiction to order money in Court, under that Act, to be paid out to such trustees without having their cestuis que trust before the Court. The payment has been ordered by the Court in cases where the corporation or company by whom the money has been paid in have consented (e), but in the most recent case the jurisdiction has been doubted by the Court of Appeal (f). It is clear, however, that under the Settled Land Act, 1882, section 21, which authorises payment of capital money arising under that Act to any person "becoming absolutely entitled or empowered to give an absolute discharge," the Court has a discretion to order such payment; but it cannot be demanded as of right (g).

[Receipt of money by solicitor or agent.]

65. Independently of powers recently conferred by statute, and in the absence of special circumstances, trustees were not justified in authorising their solicitor or other agent to receive purchase-money which ought to be paid personally to them (a), so that in general, even though a written authority, signed by the trustees and authorising a purchaser to pay the purchase-money to their solicitors, were produced, the purchaser could not be required to act upon it.

[Conveyancing Act, 1881.]

By the 56th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (b) it was enacted that "where a solicitor produces a deed having in the body thereof or indorsed thereon a receipt for consideration money or other consideration, the deed being executed, or the indorsed receipt being signed, by the person entitled to give a receipt for that consideration, the deed shall be sufficient authority to the person liable to pay or give the same for his paying or giving the same to the solicitor, without the solicitor producing any separate or other direction or authority in that behalf from the person who executed or signed the deed or receipt." In the recent case of Re Bellamy and the Metropolitan Board of Works (c), it was held that this section did not alter or enlarge the powers of trustees as to giving an authority to an agent to receive purchase-money for them, and that, therefore, in the absence of special circumstances justifying trustees in giving such an authority, a purchaser from them could insist upon paying the money to the trustees personally or to their joint account at a bank designated by them. But the

Trustee Act, 1888 (d), has altered the law in this respect, by enacting that "it shall be lawful for a trustee to appoint a solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for any money or any valuable consideration or property receivable by such trustee under the trust by permitting such solicitor to have the custody of, and to produce (e), a deed containing any such receipt as is referred to in the 56th section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881; and no trustee shall be chargeable with breach of trust by reason only of his having made or concurred in making any such appointment; and the producing of any such deed by such solicitor shall have the same validity and effect, by virtue of the said 56th section, as the same would have had if the person appointing such solicitor had not been a trustee." As this enactment only authorises the appointment of a solicitor as agent, it does not enable trustees to appoint one of themselves to receive purchase-money, and if the money is to be paid to them directly the purchaser can, it seems, require all of them to attend personally to receive it (a).

The recent statutory provision extends only to the receipt of the money and not to the retention of it—it being expressly provided (b) that the trustee shall not be exempt from any liability which he would have incurred if the Act had not passed, "in case he permits such money, valuable consideration, or property to remain in the hands or under the control of the solicitor appointed as aforesaid for a period longer than is reasonably necessary to enable such solicitor to pay or transfer the same to the trustee."

Production of the deed pursuant to section 56 of the Conveyancing Act is "equivalent to a special authority given to the solicitor to receive the money" (c) and the person producing the deed must be the solicitor acting for the party to whom the money is expressed to be paid (d).

66. The Trustee Act, 1888, further enacts (e) that "it shall be lawful for a trustee to appoint a banker or solicitor to be his agent to receive and give a discharge for any money payable to such trustee under or by virtue of a policy of assurance, by permitting such banker or solicitor to have the custody of and to produce such policy of assurance with a receipt signed by such trustee," but (as under the clause already referred to) the trustee is to be liable in respect of the money in case he permits it to remain in the hands or under the control of the banker or solicitor longer than is reasonably necessary. or other express authority from the trustees, will be no discharge (a). However, if the money has been put into a channel by which it may reach the hands of the vendor, and the vendor by his agent delivers a receipt for it to the purchaser, the vendor cannot afterwards throw the loss of the money on the purchaser (b).]

Deposit money.

68. When trustees sell by auction, the auctioneer is their agent, and the trustees will be answerable if they improperly trusted him, or be guilty of any unnecessary delay in recovering the deposit from him (c).

Trustees bound to answer inquiries.

69. Trustees for sale for payment of debts are of course bound at any time to answer inquiries by the author of the trust, or the persons claiming under him, as to what estates have been sold and what debts have been paid (d).

Custody of vouchers.

70. When the affairs of the trust have been finally settled, the trustees will be entitled to the possession of the vouchers as their discharge to the cestuis que trust; but the cestuis que trust will have a right to the inspection of them (e); but not to copies without paying for them.

Land discharged when money raised.

71. The land is discharged so soon as the fund has been actually raised, even though the proceeds may be misapplied, and do not reach their proper destination. The remedy of the parties aggrieved is against the trustees personally, without any lien upon the estate (f). And if a legacy be charged on land (either by the creation of a term or without a term), on the insufficiency of the personal estate, and the personal estate was originally sufficient, but becomes insufficient by the devastavit of the executor, the land is discharged (g) unless the devisees of the land are also the persons by whose default the insufficiency arose (h).

Effect of administration suit.

of sale they can execute it with the sanction of the Court for the purpose of passing the legal estate. But the power, though exercised under the eye of the Court, must of course be pursued as strictly as if there were no suit, and though the trustees may be able to pass the legal estate, yet in equity no good title will be conferred as against a cestui que trust who was not a party to the suit, or otherwise bound by the exercise of the power. Trustees for sale, with a power of signing receipts, can, if there be no suit, convey the estate, and sign a valid discharge for the purchase-money, but if the Court and not the trustees sell the estate, the purchaser would not acquire a good title as against any cestui que trust who was not a party to the suit or not bound by the order. These observations must not be taken to interfere with the legal power of an executor, even after decree, to deal with the general personal assets of the testator (a).

[73. If in an administration action, or an action for the execution of the trusts of a written instrument, a sale is ordered of any property vested in any executor, administrator, or trustee, the conduct of the sale is to be given to such executor, administrator or trustee, unless the Court otherwise directs (b). [Conduct of sale by Court.]

Where a sale is ordered by the Court, the Court may authorise the same to be carried out by proceedings altogether out of Court (c).] [Sale out of Court.]

SECTION II.

THE POWER OF TRUSTEES TO SIGN DISCHARGES FOR THE PURCHASE-MONEY.

THE power of trustees to sign discharges for the purchase-money resolves itself into two questions:—First: Are the trustees justified in making the sale at all? and, Secondly: Supposing the sale itself to be proper, is the purchaser bound to see to the application of his purchase-money?

First. Are the trustees justified in proceeding to a sale?

1. If a testator devise an estate to trustees, and direct a sale of it for payment of debts on the insufficiency of the personal assets, Trust for sale for payment of debts.

(a) Berry v. Gibbons, 8 L. R. Ch. App. 747.

the trustees ought not to dispose of the realty, until it appears that the personal fund is not equal to meet the demands of the creditors. But the point we have here to consider is, how will the purchaser be affected, and, as he has no means of investigating the accounts, he is not to be prejudiced should it prove eventually that the personalty is sufficient (a). All that could reasonably, and which perhaps would be required of him, is, that he should apply to the executor, where the trustee does not sustain that character, and ask if the necessity for the sale has arisen. However, a purchaser is prevented in such a case from dealing exclusively with the trustee out of Court, where a suit has been instituted for the administration of the estate (b). And the Court itself cannot make a good title where it has been found in the suit that all the debts have been paid (c).

Power of sale on insufficiency of personal estate.

2. But if a testator give not the estate but a power of sale only to his trustees, and that conditional on the insufficiency of the personal estate, then the purchaser must at his peril ascertain that the power can be exercised (d). The difference between a trust and a power is this. In the former case, the trustees, having the legal estate, can transfer it to the purchaser by their ownership; and equity, as the purchaser had no opportunity of discovering the true state of things, will not allow his title to be impeached. But where there is a power merely, the insufficiency of the personal estate is a condition precedent; and if it did not pre-exist in fact, the power never arose, and the purchaser took nothing by the assumed execution of it.

Case of selling more than the trust requires.

3. A purchaser is not bound to ascertain whether more is offered for sale than is sufficient to answer the purposes of the trust: for how is the purchaser to know what exact sum is wanted, without investigating the accounts? And if the sale be by auction the trustees cannot tell à priori what the property will fetch. Besides, the trustees are entitled, as incident to their office, to raise their costs and expenses (e).

4. But where a testator directed on the insufficiency of his personal estate a sale in the first instance of estate A., and, should that not answer the purpose, then of estate B., and the trustees, fifteen years after the testator's death, contracted for the sale of B. first, and then filed a bill for specific performance, alleging the existence of debts, and that A. was already in mortgage, or otherwise charged to the full value, the Court, considering it was unlikely that creditors would have lain by for so many years, and that the non-existence of debts might therefore be suspected, and that what was ground for suspicion might be deemed notice to a purchaser, determined against the title (a).

Secondly. Supposing the sale to be proper, is the purchaser bound to see to the application of his purchase-money?

Lord St. Leonards' Act.

We must here advert in limine to some important recent enactments. By Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 23 (passed 13th August, 1859), it is declared that "the bonâ fide payment to and the receipt of any person to whom any purchase or mortgage money shall be payable upon any express or implied trust shall effectually discharge the person paying the same from seeing to the application or being answerable for the misapplication thereof, unless the contrary shall be expressly declared by the instrument creating the trust or security." It will be observed, 1. That the Act applies not to all moneys subject to a trust, but only to moneys arising from sales and mortgages and subject to a trust. 2. That the language of the section, more particularly of the latter part of it, is in the future tense, so that the enactment is not to be retrospective. If future settlors are to have the option of excluding the operation of the Act, it should not affect prior settlements by settlors who had no such option. 3. As regards trusts or mortgages created by instruments since the date of the Act, it would seem that to the extent of sale moneys and mortgage moneys the whole doctrine in equity of seeing to the application of money has been swept away. It cannot be said that where A. is trustee for B. the money is payable to B. and not to A., and that therefore the clause shall not apply, for the doctrine of equity is that the money is payable to A., but the purchaser or mortgagee is bound to see it properly applied by A.

Lord Cranworth's Act.

By Lord Cranworth's Act, 23 & 24 Vict. c. 145, s. 29 (passed 28th August, 1860), it was enacted that "The receipts in writing of any trustees or trustee for any money payable to them or him by reason or in exercise of any trusts or powers" should be good discharges; but by section 34, the operation of the Act was expressly confined to instruments executed after the passing of the Act.

(a) Pierce v. Scott, 1 Y. & C. 257.

[Conveyancing Act; receipt of trustee now sufficient under trust whenever created.]

[By the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, which repealed the 29th section of Lord Cranworth's Act, "the receipts in writing of any trustees or trustee for any money, securities, or other personal property or effects payable, transferable, or deliverable to them or him under any trust or power" are made sufficient discharges, and the section applies to trusts created either before or after the commencement of the Act (a).]

As the clauses in [the Acts prior to the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, were not retrospective, and questions may still arise on titles as to the validity of receipts by trustees who had no express powers of signing receipts, and the earlier authorities are of importance with reference to the construction and application of the recent enactments,] it is necessary to consider generally and apart from legislative enactment the power of trustees for sale to sign receipts.

Principle of requiring a purchaser to see to the application of his purchase-money.

1. As a general rule, if a person have in his hands money or other property to which another person is entitled, he cannot discharge himself from liability but by payment or transfer to the true owner. If an estate be vested in A. upon trust to sell and, divide the proceeds between B. and C., in a Court of law the absolute ownership is in A., and his receipt, therefore, will discharge the purchaser; but in equity B. and C., the cestuis que trust, are the true proprietors, and A. is merely the instrument for the execution of the settlor's purpose, and the receipt, therefore, to be effectual, must be signed by B. and C. (b).

The rule controlled by the intention of the settlor.

2. Such is the primâ facie rule in trusts; but in every instance it is liable to be controlled and defeated by an intention to the contrary collected from the instrument creating the trust, whether that intention be expressed or implied.

Either expressed

3. The former is the case, if the settlor direct in express terms that the receipts of A., the trustee, shall discharge the purchaser from seeing to the application of the purchase-money; for B. and C. cannot at the same moment claim under and contradict the instrument—they cannot avail themselves of the sale, and reject the proviso affecting the receipt.

[(a) 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, ss. 36, 71. The purchaser must of course satisfy himself that the money is "payable" to the trustee. He would not, it is apprehended, be justified in paying to a bare trustee.]

(b) See Weatherby v. St. Giorgio, 2 Hare, 624. The power of the vendor to sign a discharge for the purchase-money is a question not of conveyance but of title; Forbes v. Peacock, 12 Sim. 521.

The words in a power of attorney, "to sign discharges in the name of the assignor or otherwise, and to do all other acts as the principal might have done," have been held to carry such a direction (a) where not controlled by a subsequent receipt clause tending to negative that intent (b). But the receipt clause has not always been liberally construed; as where trustees were entitled to receive a sum of stock with a power of varying securities, a receipt signed for cash was held to be no discharge, though the Court said that had there been any indication of an intention to exercise the power of varying securities for which cash would be required, the decision might have been different (c). It would have been more satisfactory had the Court held that as the trust fund in the hands of the trustees in the shape of cash did not necessarily imply a breach of trust the receipt was sufficient.

Or implied.

4. In what cases a power of signing receipts is implied, has never been satisfactorily ascertained. However, two principles appear to be the basis upon which most of the distinctions taken by the Courts have been founded.

Direction to sell implies power in some one to sign discharges at time of sale.

5. First. In the creation of a trust for immediate sale, it is implied that a legal and equitable discharge for the purchase money shall be signed by some one at the time of the sale. There can be no conveyance of the estate without payment of the money, and there can be no such payment without a complete discharge. Should the settlor have contemplated a sale at a time when, as he must have known, the cestuis que trust, or some of them, were either not in existence, or not of capacity to execute legal acts (d)

(a) Binks v. Lord Rokeby, 2 Mad. 227; see 238, 239; Desborough v. Harris, 5 De G. M. & G. 439. In this case L. C. Cranworth considered that an assignment of a policy by way of mortgage vests a power of signing receipts in the mortgagee from the nature of the case, and independently of any express power of signing receipts, for the possession of the policy is evidence that something is due, and the Insurance Company cannot be expected to take the account between mortgagor and mortgagee. Of course it would be otherwise if the company had express notice that the mortgage had been satisfied. The difficulty felt by the insurance companies in such cases has been, that after paying upon the equitable title they might incur costs pending an action upon the legal title. However, a defendant may now plead an equitable defence at law; and if successful upon the equitable defence would recover his costs in the action. See further Ottley v. Gray, 16 L. J. N.S. Ch. 512; Curton v. Jellicoe, 14 Ir. Ch. Rep. 180. The assignee of a policy is now enabled to bring an action in a court of law; 30 & 31 Vict. c. 144, s. 1. And see 36 & 37 Vict. 3. 66.

[or could only be ascertained in futuro (a)], the intention must be presumed that the receipts of the trustees should be a release to the purchaser.

As to cestuis que trust out of the jurisdiction.

As to cestuis que trust who, after the date of the instrument, go out of the jurisdiction, or are otherwise incapacitated to concur, the general rule does not apply, for it cannot be said that the settlor meant the trustees to sign receipts for them, the presumption being the other way.

Where trust is annexed to the purchase-money it is implied that the trustee shall apply it.

6. Secondly. If a sale be directed, and the proceeds are not simply to be paid over to certain parties, but there is a special trust annexed, the inference is that the settlor meant to confide the execution of the trust to the hands of the trustee, and not of the purchaser, and that the trustee therefore can sign a receipt (b).

Mr. Booth's opinion.

An opinion of Mr. Booth shows that even in his time regard was had to the nature of the trust in exempting the purchaser from liability. A testator had directed his trustees to sell and invest the proceeds upon the trusts thereinafter mentioned, and then gave his wife an annuity of 50*l.* a year, for her life, to be paid out of the proceeds, and subject thereto, gave the fund to his son ; but in case of his death under twenty-one, to the person entitled to his Taunton lands. Mr. Booth wrote, " I am of opinion, that all that will be incumbent on the purchaser to see done will be to see that the trustees invest the purchase-money, in their names, in some of the public stocks or funds, or on Government securities, and in such case the purchaser will not be answerable for any misapplication, after such investment of the money, of any moneys which may arise by the dividends or interest, or by disposition of such funds, stocks, or securities, it not being possible that the testator should expect from any purchaser any further degree of care or circumspection than during the time that the transaction for the purchase was carrying on, and therefore the testator must be supposed to place his sole confidence in the trustees, and this is the settled practice in these cases, and I have often advised so much, and no more, to be done." And in this opinion Mr. Wilbraham also concurred (a).

See Glynn v. Locke, 3 Dr. & War. 11 ; Ford v. Ryan, 4 Ir. Ch. Rep. 342. In Cox v. Cox, 1 K. & J. 251, Vice-Chancellor Wood held, that a power of signing receipts was by no means one inserted as of course in legal instruments, but often excluded, and when excluded, was never implied, except under very special circumstances. The question in that case arose upon the construction of a will which gave to the tenant for life the like powers of selling and exchanging as were contained in a settlement referred to, and in which were not only powers of sale and exchange, but also a power of signing receipts, and the Vice-Chancellor was of opinion that the powers of sale and exchange only, without the power of signing receipts, were incorporated by reference.

Trust to pay debts.

7. To the principle under consideration is referable the well-known rule, that a purchaser is not bound to see to the application of his money where the trust is for payment of debts generally; for to ascertain who are the creditors, and what is the amount of their respective claims, is matter of trust involving long and intricate accounts, and requiring the production of vouchers which the purchaser would have no right to require (b). And mere absence of statement of the purpose for which the money is wanted will not make a purchaser or mortgagee liable on the ground of presumed knowledge that the money was to be applied otherwise than for payment of debts (c). So if the trust be for payment of a particular debt named, and of the testator's other debts (d). So if the trust be for payment of debts and legacies, the purchaser is equally protected; for as the discharge of the debts must precede that of the legacies, and the purchaser is not called upon to mix himself up with the settlement of the debts, he is necessarily absolved from all liabilities in respect of the legacies (e).

Scheduled debts or legacies.

debts only (a), or of legacies only (b), then, as there is no trust to be executed requiring time or discretion, but the purchase-money is simply to be distributed amongst certain parties, there is no reason why the purchaser should not, under the general rule, be expected to see that the purchase-money finds its way into the proper channel. And the purchaser, where legacies only were charged, continued to be bound to see to the application of his money, though by 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 104, the real estate of all persons deceased since the 29th of August, 1833, was rendered liable, in the hands of the heir or devisee, to the payment of debts generally, whether by specialty or simple contract (c).

Where, notwithstanding a charge of debts, the purchaser must see to the application of his money.

9. And even where the estate is subjected by the testator to a trust for payment of debts generally, the purchaser will not be indemnified by the receipt of the trustee if there be any collusion between them (d); or if the purchaser have notice from the intrinsic evidence of the transaction that the purchase-money is intended to be misapplied (e); or if a suit has been instituted which takes the administration of the estate out of the hands of the trustees (f); and these doctrines, it is conceived, are not affected by the clauses in Lord St. Leonards' and Lord Cranworth's Acts, [and the late Conveyancing Act] which apply only to bonâ fide payments.

Purchase from trustees after a length of time.

10. ject to the charge had been let into possession, and the purchaser asked if there were any debts and the vendors declined to answer, it was held that the vendors could make a good title (a), and Lord Romilly observed that he had known so many cases where after distribution of the assets, debts had appeared which did not exist at the death of the testator, but which arose subsequently out of obligations entered into by him, that a very liberal term ought to be allowed for the exercise of the power of sale (b). [The Court of Appeal has, however, recently expressed an opinion that twenty-seven years is too long a period, and laid down the rule that for a period of twenty years from the testator's death a purchaser should not be bound or entitled to ascertain whether the debts were paid, but that after the lapse of that period it is fair to presume that the debts have been paid and the purchaser is bound to enquire (c), and this rule has been followed in Ireland (d).]

Power of signing receipts a question of intention at the date of the instrument.

11. As the exemption of the purchaser from seeing to the application of the purchase-money depends as a general rule upon the settlor's intention, the question must be viewed with reference to the date of the instrument, and not as affected by circumstances which have subsequently transpired (e). Thus, if a trust be created for payment of debts and legacies, and the trustees, after full payment of the debts, contract for the sale of the estate, the purchaser will not, upon this principle, be bound to see to the application of the money in payment of the legacies (f).

Forbes v. Peacock.

12. In Forbes v. Peacock (g), a testator directed his debts to be paid, and gave the estate to his wife (whom he appointed his executrix) for life, subject to his debts and certain legacies, and empowered her to sell the estate in her lifetime, and directed that if it were not sold in her lifetime, it should be sold at her death and the proceeds applied in a manner showing that they were intended to pass through the hands of the executors, and the testator requested certain persons to act as executors and trustees with his wife. The widow lived twenty-five years, and after her death the surviving executor contracted for the sale of the estate. The Vice-Chancellor of England held that, after so long a lapse of time from the testator's death, the purchaser had a right to ask if the debts had been paid, and if he received no answer, it amounted to notice that they had been paid, and he must see to the application of his purchase-money. The V. C. observed, "When the objection is made by the purchaser that the executors cannot make a good title because all the debts have been paid, if the question is put by him simply, are there or are there not any debts remaining unpaid, he has a right to an answer" (a). And on a subsequent day he observed, "Here the purchaser has asked the executor whether any of the testator's debts were unpaid at the date of the contract, and the executor refused to give him an answer. Under these circumstances, if it should turn out that all the debts were paid, I should hold that the purchaser had notice of that fact, and that he was bound to see that his purchase-money was properly applied" (b).

It is evident that this doctrine was not in accordance with former decisions, and the cause was carried on appeal to the Lord Chancellor, when the decision below was reversed (c). Lord Lyndhurst said, "If the purchaser had notice that the vendor intended to commit a breach of trust, and was selling the estate for that purpose, he would, by purchasing under such circumstances, be concurring in the breach of trust, and thereby become responsible. But assuming that the facts relied upon in this case amount to notice that the debts had been paid; yet, as the executor had authority to sell not only for the payment of debts but also for the purpose of distribution among the residuary legatees, this would not afford any inference that the executor

Hall decided that the vendor was bound to answer the purchaser's enquiry "whether the vendor is or her solicitors are aware of any judgments, settlements, mortgages, charges, or incumbrances of any description affecting the property not disclosed by the abstract of the vendor's title." But the V. C. added that he "must not be considered as altogether approving of the requisition being made in the form above-mentioned. The answer might lead to the disclosure of what the purchaser would rather not know. The requisition should, he thought, be added to, thus, 'and which if remaining undisclosed might prejudicially affect the purchaser,'" March, 1875. [But this view has since been overruled by the Court of Appeal in the case of Re Ford and Hill, 10 Ch. Div. 365, where it was held that the purchaser was not entitled to make any such requisition at all.]

was committing a breach of trust in selling the estate, or that he was not performing what his duty required. The case then comes to this: If authority is given to sell for the payment of debts and legacies, and the purchaser knows that the debts are paid, is he bound to see to the application of the purchase-money? I apprehend not."

Lord St. Leonards, with reference to the same important case, observed, "When a testator by his will charges his debts and legacies, he shows that he means to entrust his trustees with the power of receiving the money, anticipating that there will be debts, and thus providing for the payment of them. It is, by implication, a declaration by the testator that he intends to entrust the trustees with the receipt and application of the money, and not to throw any obligation at all upon the purchaser or mortgagee. That intention does not cease because there are no debts. If a trust be created for payment of debts and legacies, the purchaser or mortgagee should in no case (in the absence of fraud), be bound to see to the application of the money raised." And his Lordship added, "as to Forbes v. Peacock, it is quite a mistake to suppose that that was a trust executed at a distance of twenty-five years from the time when it arose, for it was executed at the time when it did arise, which happened to be twenty-five years after the death of the testator" (a).

Power of varying securities, and of investment.

13. If a trustee have authority to invest the trust fund with a power of varying securities, but without an express power of signing receipts, it is implied from the nature of the trust that he shall sign receipts (b); and if he be authorised to invest on security simply without power of varying securities he can sign receipts, for he cannot prevent the borrower from paying off the money, and who but the trustee can receive it back (c). Indeed a power of investment has been held to carry with it a power of varying the securities (d). Where, however, the trustee was directed to invest upon security, but real security was not mentioned, and he lent upon a mortgage, the Court did not think it so clear that the trustee could sign a receipt when the money was paid off as to compel a purchaser to take a title which depended on that question (e). The power of signing a receipt in such cases turns on the intention as collected from the instrument, and unless it contain authority to lend on a mortgage no power of signing a receipt when the mortgage money is paid off is implied.

Power of sale and exchange.

14. A power of signing receipts was held not to be implied in a power of sale and exchange (a). But in that case it was a mere power of sale and exchange, and not the ordinary power inserted in settlements, accompanied with directions for laying out on another purchase with interim investment on securities.

Charge of debts.

15. The case in which a testator, instead of devising the estate upon an express trust for payment of debts, creates a charge of debts upon his real estate, seems to require particular examination. It might have been a simple and useful rule to hold under such circumstances that the executor, and the executor only, as the person who has administration of the personal assets, should, by virtue of an implied power, sell the real estate for payment of the debts; but no such rule ever existed, and we proceed, therefore, to ascertain, as far as we can, by what principle the Court is guided.

Devise to trustees with a charge of debts.

a. If a testator charge his real estate with debts, and then devises it to trustees upon certain trusts, which do not provide for a sale or perhaps even negative the intention of conferring a power of sale, can the trustees give a good title to a purchaser? It is clear that [subject to the restrictions arising under the Settled Land Act, 1882, which will be subsequently discussed (b),] the trustees and the executor together can sell (c), and the question is, upon what principle this proceeds. Is the executor the vendor, and if so, has he a legal power which enables him to pass the estate at law independently of the trustee? V. C. (late L. J.) Knight Bruce seemed, on one occasion, to think that the cases of Shaw v. Borrer and Ball v. Harris might have been decided on this footing (d), and some recent cases lean in the same direction (a). But the notion of the executor passing the legal estate in such a case was never suggested until the last few years, and what was said by the Court of Exchequer in Doe v. Hughes was at least true at the time it was spoken, viz., that not a single case could be produced in which a mere charge had been held to give the executors a legal power (b). Have the executors then an equitable power, and is the trustee who has the legal estate bound to convey it as the executor directs? This doctrine would be a very rational one, but there is no trace of it in the cases themselves. Apparently they were decided on the familiar principle that in a Court of Equity there is no difference between a charge of debts and a trust for payment of debts (c), and that the trustees therefore took the legal estate upon the trusts of the will, the first of which was to pay the testator's debts. It is certainly not a little remarkable that after an examination of all the authorities upon the subject, there does not appear to be one in which the trustee has sold alone, without the concurrence of the executor. This circumstance may be easily accounted for, as trustees of the will are almost invariably appointed executors also, and where that is not the case, the purchaser naturally requires the concurrence of the executor, not on the ground that he is the vendor, but to satisfy the purchaser that the sale of the real estate is bonâ fide from the insufficiency of the personal assets. In some of the cases the Court has noticed, but not laid any stress upon, the circumstance of the personal representative concurring (d), or of the characters of trustee and personal representative being combined; but in others that fact has been passed over in silence

R. H. L. 731. In Shaw v. Borrer, the trustees and executors were co-plaintiffs, and the prayer of the bill was, that the purchase-money might be paid to the executors. This, if done by the order of the Court, would indemnify the trustees; but it did not follow that the trustees, on the completion of the sale out of Court, could have allowed the executors to receive the money. The question to whom the money should be paid was not adverted to in the argument, nor does it appear to whom it was paid.

C. of England observed, "It is manifest that Harris (the trustee), who had the legal fee was competent to mortgage that estate to any person who would advance money for the benefit of the testator's estate," 8 Sim. 497; and it is equally clear that Lord Cottenham was of opinion that Harris was a trustee for payment of debts, 4 M. & Cr. 267.

as a mere accident, and the Court has relied on the general doctrine that a trustee of the estate charged with debts could sell and sign a valid discharge for the purchase-money (a). In Doe v. Hughes (b), the case most adverse to the powers arising from a charge of debts, it was admitted that by a devise to trustees of the real estate, subject to a charge of debts, the trustees had thereby imposed upon them the duty of raising the money to pay the debts, and this was the opinion of Lord Hardwicke, as expressed in a case which we do not remember to have seen cited. In Ex parte Turner (c), where the estate had been given subject to debts, but no express trust was created for the purpose, he observed, "Where a devise is general 'in trust' or 'subject to pay debts,' the devisee may sell or mortgage, but he must pay the money to the creditors of his devisor; but if he do not, the mortgagee is not to suffer, for in cases of these general devises he is not obliged to see to the application of the money he advances. But even in this case inconveniences often arise, for where the estate is equitable assets, as it is where it is accompanied with a trust, the creditors who have not specific liens upon the land ought to come in equally, and pari passu. However, if the trustee prefer one creditor to another, where he ought not, the remedy usually is against the trustee, and not the lender of the money, for if the latter was to see to the application of his money upon so general a trust, he could not safely advance his money without a decree in this Court."

If the trustees of an estate charged with debts can, by virtue not of the express trust but of the trust implied by the charge, sell the estate, and sign a receipt for the purchase-money, it would seem to follow that they cannot allow the proceeds to be paid to the executor as not being the proper hand to receive (d), the executor in that character having no privity with the real estate. The necessity of requiring the concurrence of the personal representative would often lead to practical inconvenience, for on the death of the executor intestate there would be no personal representative of the testator, and the personal assets having been exhausted, there would be no fund for taking out letters of administration; not to mention that, should the executor be held to have any concern with the proceeds of the real estate, by virtue of the will, the administrator, not being appointed by the will, would not succeed to the power of the executor, which should be borne in mind as of some importance in considering whether the sale is substantially that of the executor or of the trustee who takes subject to the charge.

Should the neat point ever call for a decision, it will probably be held that the trustee, without the concurrence of the executor, can give a good title (a).

Lord St. Leonards' Act.

By Lord St. Leonards' Act (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 14) where by a will coming into operation after 13th August, 1859, a testator charges real estate with the payment of debts, or any specific legacy or sum, and devises the estate so charged to trustees for the whole of his estate or interest, and makes no express provision for raising the debts, legacy, or sum, the devisees in trust may sell or mortgage; and by s. 15, the power is continued to all persons taking the estate so charged by survivorship, descent (b), or devise; and by s. 17, purchasers and mortgagees are not bound to enquire whether such powers "have been duly and correctly exercised by the person or persons acting in virtue thereof." Where debts are charged, of course a purchaser or mortgagee under these powers is not bound to see to the application of his money, and where a specific legacy or sum is charged, if the above enactments do not per se confer a power of signing receipts, the purchaser or mortgagee is exempted from seeing to the application by the 23rd section of the same Act (c).

The 18th section declares that the Act shall "not extend to a devise to any person or persons in fee or in tail, or for the testator's whole estate and interest, charged with debts or legacies, nor shall it affect the power of any such devisee or devisees to sell or mortgage as he or they may by law now do." To make this section consistent with the 14th, the "devise" referred to in the 18th section must mean a beneficial devise, and "devisee or devisees" a beneficial devisee or devisees, and the inference would seem to be that, in the view of the framer of the Act, no legislative assistance was needed in the case of a beneficial devise subject to

(a) The recent case of Hodkinson v. Quinn, 1 J. & H. 303, when closely considered, will be found to afford little aid towards solving this question; and see Cook v. Dawson, 29 Beav. 126; 3 De G. F. & J. 127.

[(b) And sec. 30 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), seems to extend this to the legal personal representatives of a sole surviving trustee.]

[(c) See also 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 36.]

a charge. Indeed the concluding words of the section seem almost tantamount to a declaration of the legislature that beneficial devisees subject to a charge have power to sell or mortgage, which is the case we next proceed to consider (a).

Devise to a person beneficially with a charge of debts.

β. If a testator charge his debts and devise the estate subject to the charge to A. and his heirs not upon trust but for his own use, can the beneficiary in this case make a good title? The answer to the question last discussed is an answer also to this, for if where the express trust negatives the intention of conferring a power to sell the trustee can still make a good title, it is evident that he can only do so by virtue of the charge. Any distinction between the two cases would be in favour of the beneficial devisee, for if the trustee in defiance of the express trust can sell, à fortiori the devisee can, who is fettered by no such restriction. In both instances the charge operates as a trust for payment of debts, and is attended with all the same consequences. "A charge," said Lord Eldon, "is in substance and effect pro tanto a devise of the estate upon trust to pay the debts" (b), and "this," observed Lord St. Leonards, on citing the dictum, "is supported by the current of authorities" (c). It is clear that the devisee can, where he also fills the character of executor, make a good title (d), and in some of the cases the Court did not in terms rely on the characters being combined (e), but it is singular that no authority can be found in which the question whether the devisee alone can make a good title has arisen.

In the Court of Exchequer (f) it was said that in a devise to trustees, subject to a charge of debts, the trustees could sell; but that a charge in the hands of a devisee if the lands were devised, or in the hands of the heir-at-law if the lands descended, was a charge only in equity. The Court was there considering, more particularly, the question of legal powers; but if it was intended to be said that a devisee, subject to a charge, could not sell and sign a receipt for the money, the doctrine is inconsistent with the nature of a charge of debts in equity as commonly understood.

The prevalent opinion hitherto is believed to have been that a devisee subject to debts can sign a receipt for the purchase money (a), and the cases in which the Court has upheld purchases from a devisee with the concurrence of the executor but without relying upon such concurrence, would be a trap for purchasers should the Court now refuse to uphold a purchase from a devisee only. Considering the declaratory words contained at the end of the 18th section of Lord St. Leonards' Act, it may now, it is conceived, be safely assumed that a purchaser from a devisee subject to a charge of debts, will without the concurrence of the executor acquire a good title.

Charge of debts where there is no devise of the estate.

γ. If a testator charge his debts on the real estate, and does not devise the estate at all, but allows it to descend to the heir, can the heir sell and sign a receipt for the purchase-money? It appears to be clear that he cannot, for he takes nothing under the will, and cannot therefore be regarded as a person constituted by the testator a trustee by implication for payment of debts (b); he can pass the legal estate, but he could not sign the receipt; i.e. if the heir misapplied the money the creditors might still come upon the estate.

Whether executor can sell in such a case.

But in this case, if the heir is disabled from selling can the executor sell (i.e. independently of Lord St. Leonards' Act, to be mentioned presently), for otherwise the charge of debts amounts to a direction for a Chancery suit? (c). The legal question arose in Doe v. Hughes (d) before the Court of Exchequer, and the Court held that a charge had no operation at law but must be enforced in equity. This decision has been found much fault with. The Master of the Rolls said that before the case in the Exchequer he had considered the law to be that a charge of debts gave the executors an implied power of sale (e); for otherwise, it is argued, in the case of a charge where the estate descends, there can be no sale without the aid of the Court. But this does not appear to follow. If a testator expressly direct that his estate shall be sold (without naming the person), and the fund is to be distributed in a way in which the executors alone can distribute it, a power of sale is given to the executors by implication over the legal estate even in Courts of law (a). By analogy to this, where there is no direction to sell, but only a charge of debts, this last, though an umbra in a Court of law, creates an equitable power of sale or mortgage in the view of a Court of Equity—i.e. the executor may contract for the sale, and on the acceptance of the title by the purchaser, the person in whom the legal estate is vested will, as being a trustee for the executor, be compellable to convey as the executor directs, and if he refuses, the legal estate may be vested in the purchaser by the aid of the Trustee Acts (b). In Gosling v. Carter (c), Vice-Chancellor Knight Bruce declined to give an opinion whether a mere charge of debts gave to the executors a power of sale either at law or in equity, but would not compel a purchaser to take the title from the executor without the concurrence of the heir-at-law. In Robinson v. Lowater (d) the legal estate was already in the purchaser, so that the legal question did not arise, but it was held that the executors had given the purchaser a good title. In Eidsforth v. Armstead (e), Vice-Chancellor Wood professed to follow Robinson v. Lowater, and held the power of sale to be, according to the report, in the trustees, which, however, appears to be a mistake for the executors. The surviving trustee had devised the trust estate, and the devisee therefore could not sell, but the surviving trustee was also surviving executor, and appointed the devisee his executor, and in the character of executor the devisee might be thought to represent the original testator, though it seems the better opinion that even then the power of sale would not pass to him (f). In Wrigley v. Sykes (g), the Master of the Rolls decided that the executors could contract for the sale of the estate, but guarded himself by saying that the Court, as far as it could, would certainly secure to the purchaser a good legal estate when the conveyance was made. It is conceived that Doe v. Hughes was a perfectly sound decision upon the legal question, but that the executors have an equitable power of sale, and consequently that the holder of the legal estate is a trustee for them (a).

It does not appear how the purchaser had got or was to get the legal estate, whether from the executor, as having a legal power, or from the trustee, on the construction that the legal fee simple vested in the trustee under the will, or from the trustee, as having the legal estate during the life of H. Toulmin, with the concurrence of H. Toulmin, as having the legal estate in remainder, so as to extinguish his power of appointing by will. The case loses much of its force from the amicable manner in which the point was submitted to the Court.

[As the power of sale is implied because the executors are appointed by the testator to pay his debts, there has never been any such implication in the case of an administrator who is not appointed by the testator, but is the officer of the Probate Court (b).] [Power of sale not implied in administrator.]

By Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 16, as to wills taking effect since 13th August, 1859, where a testator charges his debts or any legacy or specific sum, and has not devised the hereditaments so charged "in such terms as that his whole estate and interest therein shall become vested in any trustee or trustees," the executor for the time being may sell or mortgage (c); and by the 23rd section, the purchaser or mortgagee is not bound to see to the application of the money, and it would seem that the executor is thus empowered to pass the legal as well as the equitable estate, for the clause proceeds that "any sale or mortgage under the Act shall operate only on the estate and interest, whether legal or equitable, of the testator, and shall not render it unnecessary to get in any outstanding subsisting legal estate." It must not escape notice that the power of sale is confined to the executor, the person to whom the testator himself trusted, and is not extended to an administrator (d). Lord St. Leonards' Act. Power of executor to sell and pass legal estate.

8. Should a testator charge his debts on the real estate, and then devise the estate to A. and his heirs beneficially, and the devisee dies in the testator's lifetime, so that the estate descends, can the heir in this case sell and sign receipt? If the heir cannot sell where the estate was never devised, but left to descend, à fortiori he cannot in this case, for here not only the Charge of debts where the estate lapses.

heir is not invested with the character of trustee under the will, but the estate, subject to the charge, was devised to another person, who was therefore intended to execute the implied trust. The machinery contemplated by the testator failed by the act of God, and no alternative remains but that the trusts should be executed by the Court (a). It is presumed that under these circumstances it could not be held that the executors have by the will even an equitable power of sale. The devisee, had he lived, would have been the proper person to execute the trust, and a power of sale cannot belong to the executors, as the testator could not be taken to have contemplated his own intestacy as to real estate.

Lord St. Leonards' Act.

However, by Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, ss. 16 & 23, as to wills coming into operation since 13th August, 1859, the executor may sell or mortgage and sign a receipt for the money.

Charge of debts where the estate is subjected to various limitations.

ε. Suppose a testator to charge his debts, and to devise the estate to A. for life, with contingent remainders or other limitations, which render it impossible that the implied power of sale can be executed by the devisees. This has occurred in several cases (b), and the result appears to be that the Court, if it can possibly avoid it, will not construe the charge as a direction for a Chancery suit, but will assume that a power of sale for payment of the debts was given to some one, and that as it was not given to the devisees it must have been intended for the executors. In such a case the executors must be considered as having an equitable power of sale. The case in the Exchequer (c) directly decided that the executors have no power themselves to pass the legal estate. Where, in the case supposed, the executors take an implied equitable power of sale upon the face of the will, it is immaterial whether the devised estates do or not lapse, except that the legal estate will, as the event happens, be in the devisees or in the heir-at-law. If a conveyance cannot be obtained, recourse must be had to the Trustee Acts for the transfer of the legal estate.

(a) But see Hardwick v. Mynd, 1 Anst. 109; Austin v. Martin, 29 Beav. 523. The latter case may possibly be supported on the ground that the mortgagee, who had a power of sale and of signing receipts, was a party to the conveyance; but the reasoning of M.R., if correctly reported, is not satisfactory. How can it be said, for instance, that "the whole of the beneficial interest was vested in T. F. Stephens either in his character of heir-at-law or in his character of legal personal representative"? What beneficial interest in a testator's freehold estate can vest in his personal representative?

Lord St. Leonards' Act.

However, Lord St. Leonards' Act, 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, appears to apply to such a case, for though the devise is not to trustees as required by the 14th section, yet it is a case within the 16th section, where "the whole estate and interest" of the testator "has not become vested in any trustee or trustees;" and it is presumed that the 18th section was meant to except from the Act devises to a person or body of persons taking the fee-simple or fee-tail in præsenti free from executory limitations over, and not devises of the fee-simple to several persons in succession for particular estates.

True principle.

The true principle which, independently of the enactments referred to, ought to govern these cases would appear to be, that where a testator devises the estate to trustees, or to a beneficiary, and charges his debts, there the trustees or the beneficiary should have a power of sale and signing receipts, but that where a testator charges his debts, and does not devise the estate, or devises it in such a manner that there is no one who can execute the trust, there the executors should have an equitable power of sale and signing receipts, and that the depositaries of the legal estate should be trustees for them, and bound to convey as they direct; but that where the testator has devised the estate, and therefore provided a hand to execute the trust, but the trustee or devisee dies in the testator's lifetime, there, as the hand to execute the trust has only failed by the act of God, no person has a power of sale or signing receipts, but the trust can only be executed by the Court.

Storry v. Walsh.

16. It remains to notice in connection with this subject the decision of Sir J. Romilly, M.R., in the case Storry v. Walsh (a), which appears to show that a devisee, subject to a charge of debts and legacies, may, with the concurrence of the executors declaring that all debts and legacies have been paid, sell for his own private purposes, and give a good title to a purchaser. This case resembles that of an executor, who is also specific or residuary legatee, selling a chattel interest for his own private debt (b).

[Effect of Settled Land Act.]

[17. Before quitting this subject, however, it will be proper to advert to the question whether the power of selling or mortgaging

(a) 18 Beav. 559; and see Howard v. Chaffers, 2 Dr. & Sm. 236.

(b) See infra, as to receipts of executors, p. 526.

the property which arises under a charge of debts is affected by s. 56 of the Settled Land Act, 1882 (a). That Act after giving to the tenant for life of settled property, amongst other large powers, a general power of sale, and a power of mortgaging for specific purposes, and providing by s. 56, sub-s. 1, that powers given by the settlement to trustees are not to be prejudicially affected by the Act, enacts in sub-s. 2, that "the consent of the tenant for life shall, by virtue of the Act, be necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the settlement or other persons of any power conferred by the settlement exercisable for any purpose provided for in the Act," and the question is whether this makes the consent of the tenant for life necessary to the exercise by the trustees of the power of selling or mortgaging which arises under a charge of debts. The power of mortgaging given by the Act is now by section 11 of the Settled Land Act, 1890 (b), which is to be read and construed together with the principal Act, extended to the raising of money for the purpose of discharging incumbrances on the settled land, and under s. 21 of the principal Act the proceeds of any sale effected under the general power of selling may be applied in discharging the incumbrances affecting the inheritance of the settled land. The purpose of paying off incumbrances seems to be strictly a "purpose provided for in the Act," and it is difficult, construing the Acts fairly, to avoid the conclusion that the trustees cannot mortgage or sell without the consent of the tenant for life. The result of this construction of the Acts is without doubt inconvenient, and the view that the power of sale arising under a charge of debts is unaffected by the 56th section is supported by weighty opinions(c), but until that view has received the sanction of the Court a purchaser could not be safely advised to accept a title from the trustees without the consent of the tenant for life (d).]

Who must sign the receipt.

18. As the trust for sale is a joint office, the receipt must be signed by all the trustees who have undertaken to act. And where a power is given to trustees to discharge the purchaser from seeing to the application of his purchase-money, the receipt must be signed even by a trustee who has parted with the estate by a conveyance to his co-trustees; for the transfer of the estate at law carries not along with it the confidence in equity (a). But the receipt need not be signed by a trustee who has disclaimed, for by the effect of disclaimer the acting trustees are put exactly in the same plight as if the renouncing trustee had never been mentioned (b).

Power to sign receipts in one, and delegation to another.

19. As a trust cannot be delegated, it follows that if A. and B. be trustees for payment of debts, and they convey the estate to C. upon the like trusts, the purchaser could not safely pay his purchase-money upon the receipt of C. In Hardwick v. Mynd (c) the executors and trustees renounced probate, and (probably with the intention of disclaiming) conveyed the estate to C., the heir-at-law; and certain mortgages made by C. were upheld. It might have been argued that as the trustees, by disclaiming, vested the estate in the heir, he was properly the trustee to sell or mortgage. It would be difficult, however, to maintain that the heir under such circumstances could sign a receipt, and certainly the Court did not put it upon that ground, but said that the mortgages if made by the trustees would have been good, and that they were in fact made by them, as they had deputed C. to act for them in the trust. Such a doctrine, however, at the present day could not be sustained.

Power of signing receipts, as regards trustees appointed by the Court.

20. As a general rule, where a special discretionary or arbitrary power was given to trustees, and the settlement contained no proviso for the appointment of new trustees with similar powers, it was not competent for the Court, [prior to the recent Acts,] on the substitution of new trustees by its own inherent jurisdiction, to invest such trustees with that arbitrary power. But in a trust for sale an authority to sign receipts is not a mere power, but enters into the substance of the trust; that is, it is so interwoven with the trust itself that there can be no execution of the trust without the accession of the power; and in such cases the appointment of new trustees by the Court may be taken to have included the power. Thus, suppose A. and B. are trustees of an estate to sell for payment of debts, and on the death of A. and B. the Court appoints C. and D. upon the like trusts; if C. and D cannot sign receipts, they cannot sell, and their appointment as trustees is nugatory (d). [But now, by recent Acts (e), trustees appointed by the Court have "the same powers, authorities, and discretions, and may in all respects act" as if originally appointed by the instrument creating the trust.]

Receipt after a breach of trust.

21. It sometimes happens that the trustees had clearly at first a power of signing receipts, but subsequently, by a breach of trust or some irregularity in the administration of the estate, the fund has got out of its proper channel, and then the question arises, whether, if the person who ought never to have had possession of the fund intend to restore it to its proper state, the trustees can sign a receipt. It may be said that as the power never contemplated a breach of trust, it would not be safe to consider the exercise of the power as an indemnity, if the money cannot be properly paid to the trustees upon any other ground: on the other hand, if the fund be reinstated in specie, so that it is standing in the exact form in which the trust required it, and in the names of the persons whom the settlement appointed the trustees, how can it be said that in such a state of things any liability can remain ? (a).

Sale where no money is to be received by the trustees.

22. Where the trust estate is in mortgage, and the money receivable by the trustees is applicable either wholly or in part in payment of the mortgage, of course the trustees may sell and sign a receipt for the difference, or, if there be no surplus beyond the mortgage, may sell without signing any receipt.

since repealed and its place supplied by 44 & 45 Vict. c. 41, s. 33; and see post, Chap. xxiii. s. 2.]

(a) See Lander v. Weston, 3 Drew. 389; Hanson v. Beverley, Sugd. Vend. & Purch. 848, 11th edit. In Carver v. Richards, A. & B. were trustees of Mrs. Warren's settlement, dated 31st May, 1825, which contained a power of investing the trust fund on a mortgage of lands of inheritance in fee simple, with the usual receipt clause. On 27 July, 1826, the trustees invested 1200*l.* on a mortgage of a term of 500 years. On 23 November, 1844, the owner of the fee subject to the term paid the 1200*l.* to A. and B. who assigned the term to attend, and the receipt of A. and B., notwithstanding the breach of trust, was held to be sufficient. M. R. 10 December, 1859. The defendants appealed from the decree upon other points, and also included this, but wanted the courage to argue it at the hearing. It not unfrequently happens that trustees without any sufficient power lay out trust money in the purchase of real estate, and then the question arises whether when they want to sell again they can make a good title. The case may be provided for by a special condition of sale or the sanction of the Court may be obtained in a suit for the purpose: see Robinson v. Robinson, 10 Ir. Rep. Eq. 189. [But in a recent case where trustees had, without any power so to do, purchased land and had it conveyed to them upon the trusts of the settlement and afterwards resold it for a much larger sum than they gave, it was held that upon the purchase-money being invested by the trustees on the securities authorised by the instrument creating the trust, and on one of the cestuis que trust concurring in the sale to show that they had not all elected to take the real estate as realty, the purchasers would have a good title from the trustees: Re Patten and Guardians of the Edmonton Union, 52 L. J. N.S. Ch. 787; 48 L. T. N.S 870; 31 W. R. 785.]

Hope v. Liddell.

23. Where the trustees have a power of signing receipts, it was held not to be necessary that the trustees who signed the receipts, should themselves actually receive the money, provided it was paid to some person by their direction, and the transaction did not on the face of it imply a breach of trust (a). Thus, where the purchase-money was expressed in the deed to be paid to the trustee, and a receipt by the trustee was endorsed, but in fact the money was paid, by the direction of the trustee, to the tenant for life; Lord Romilly, M.R., said, that the purchaser was bound to pay the money as the trustee directed (b), and having obeyed that direction was exonerated from the consequences. Various transactions might have occurred between the trustee and cestuis que trust (such as the execution of a previous mortgage on sufficient security), which would make such a payment perfectly legitimate (c). The Court in this case was protecting a bonâ fide purchaser, and the principle here laid down must be applied with great caution. A purchaser who has paid his money to another by the direction of the trustee may be protected under the special circumstances of the case, but no purchaser who has the money still in his pocket can be advised to pay it to any other than the trustee or his solicitor duly authorised to act as his agent (d) [under the provisions of section 2 of the Trustee Act, 1888, already referred to (e).]

the concurrence of her husband, who is answerable for her acts; and ought the money to be paid to herself, or to her husband who on the one hand is answerable for her acts, but on the other hand is not the person pointed out by the settlement as the hand to receive it? It would appear on principle that the money cannot be paid to the husband, who is a stranger, and the safest course would be to pay the money into some responsible bank in the joint names of the trustees (excluding the husband), and to take a written receipt from the trustees, to be also signed by the husband as sanctioning the receipt by the wife (a). [The concurrence of the husband may however be dispensed with if he has abjured the realm or is an outlaw (b), and where a married woman who is a trustee sues under Order 16, Rule 16, without her husband, she can give a good discharge for the money recovered under the judgment without his concurrence (c). And where the marriage has taken place since the 31st December, 1882, or the trust has been undertaken by the married woman since that date, she can sign a receipt for the money, without the concurrence of her husband who is not to be answerable for her acts unless he has intermeddled in the trust (d).]

Solicitor receiving purchase-money.

26. If the trustees of an estate, bound by a contract for sale of a date prior to the trust deed, execute a conveyance to the purchaser and sign a receipt indorsed, and leave the deed in the hands of the solicitor of the settlor who had contracted to sell, and the solicitor completes the sale and receives the purchase-money and misapplies it, the trustees are personally liable to the cestuis que trust, as having improperly enabled the solicitor of a third person to get possession of the fund (e).

Practical directions where no power to sign receipts.

27. The following observations of Lord St. Leonards upon the subject of trustees' receipts, deserve every attention. "Where," he says, "a purchaser is bound to see the money applied according to the trust, and the trust is for payment of debts or legacies, he must see the money actually paid to the creditors or legatees. In cases of this nature, therefore, each creditor or legatee, upon receiving his money, should give as many receipts as there are purchasers, so that each purchaser may have one; or if the creditors or legatees are but few they may be made parties to the conveyance. Another mode by which the purchaser may be secured is an assignment by all the creditors and legatees of their debts and legacies to a trustee, with a declaration that his receipts shall be sufficient discharges, and then the trustee can be made a party to the several conveyances. Sometimes a bill is filed for carrying the agreement into execution, when the purchase-money is of course directed to be paid into Court; and this is the surest mode, because the money will not be paid out of Court without the knowledge of the purchaser" (a).

New principle suggested.

28. From the preceding discussion the fundamental principle may be collected, that (where no Act of Parliament applies (b)) a purchaser is in all cases bound to see to the application of his purchase-money, unless a positive intention to the contrary on the part of the settlor be either expressed or implied in the instrument creating the trust. Such indeed is the conclusion to which the authorities conduct us; but, independently of precedent, it might be suggested that the better principle would be, that, primâ facie, a direction to sell should imply in all cases a power of signing discharges; but that where it was practicable, and no impediment to the execution of the trust was thereby created, the purchaser should pay his money directly to the party beneficially entitled. The distinction between the two principles is very material. According to the former rule, if a trust be created for payment of debts and legacies, and the debts be paid, and then the trustees sell, though the purchaser has notice of all debts having been discharged, he is nevertheless not bound to see to the application of his purchase-money, because there was an implied intention by the settlor that the receipts of trustees should be sufficient acquittances (c); but, by the operation of the latter rule, the purchaser would be bound, for the necessity of his paying the money immediately to the legatees would not, if they were of age, prevent the completion of the sale, and therefore there is no reason why the purchaser should be exempted from seeing to the application. Again, suppose a trust for sale, with a direction to distribute the proceeds between A., B., and C., and that, after the date of the instrument, C. quits the country or cannot be found. According to the first principle, as the absence of C. was not an event in the contemplation of the settlor, and no inference can be drawn that he meant the trustees to sign receipts, it follows that the sale is rendered impossible, and the contradiction arises, that the settlor having in express terms directed a sale, and it being admitted that the will of the settlor is authoritative, yet the execution of that intention is intercepted by the construction of equity. "It were difficult," says Lord St. Leonards, "to maintain that the absence of a cestui que trust in a foreign country should, in a case of this nature, impede the sale of the estate" (a), and yet to such a result the rule in question, if there be no exception to it, would apparently lead. But according to the other principle suggested, no such obstacle arises. The receipts of the trustees would then primâ facie be discharges, as necessary to the execution of the sale; and as C. is not at hand, the purchaser in respect of C.'s share in the purchase-money could not be called upon to observe a rule which would interpose a bar to the accomplishment of the expressed purpose of the settlor (b).

[Person interested in several capacities.]

[29. If a person is interested in property in several capacities, and in one of such capacities can give a valid discharge for the purchase-money on the sale of the property, a purchaser who has no notice of an intended misapplication by such person of the purchase money will be discharged by his receipt (c), and it is immaterial that the conveyance does not show that the vendor is selling or receiving the purchase-money in the capacity in which he is empowered to do so; and where a person was both executrix and trustee, and as such executrix and trustee had power to carry out a transaction, and she purported to carry out such transaction as a trustee, in which capacity she had not the power, it was held that the transaction was validly effectuated (d).]

Receipts of executors.

30. As executors are to a certain extent invested with the character of trustees, it may be proper to introduce a few remarks upon their powers in disposing of the assets.

Power to sell or mortgage.

On the death of a testator the personal estate vests wholly in the executor, and to enable him to execute the office with facility, the law permits him, with or without the concurrence of any co-executor (a), to sell or even to mortgage (b), by actual assignment or by equitable deposit (c), with or without a power of sale (d), all or any part of the assets, legal or equitable (e); and though liable to render an account to the Court, he cannot be interrupted in the discharge of his office by any person claiming dehors the will, as a creditor, or under it, as a legatee. The creditor has merely a demand against the executor personally (f), the pecuniary or specific legatee is not entitled to the legacy or bequest until the executor has assented (g), and the residuary legatee has no lien until the estate has been liquidated and cleared of all liabilities, both dehors and under the will (h). Upon the sale of the chattel by the executor, the purchaser is not concerned to see to the application of his purchase-money, and it need not be recited in the conveyance that the money is wanted for the discharge of liabilities (i): it is sufficient that the purchaser trusts him whom the testator has trusted (j): if there be any misapplication, the remedy of the creditor or legatee is not against the purchaser, but the executor (k). It is impossible for the purchaser to ascertain the necessity of the sale, for this must depend upon the state of the accounts, which he has no means of investigating without the powers annexed only to the executorship (l). Even express notice of the will, and of the bequests contained in it, works to the purchaser no prejudice; for "every person," said Sir J. Leach, "who deals with an executor has necessarily implied, if not express, notice of the will: but as a purchaser of real estate devised in aid for payment of debts is not bound to inquire into the fact whether the sale is made necessary by the existence of debts, because he has no adequate means to prosecute such an inquiry, so he who deals for personal assets is, for the same reason, absolved from all inquiry with respect to debts: and it is upon this principle altogether indifferent what dispositions may be made in the will with respect to the personal property for which he deals; for whether it be specifically given or be part of the residuary estate, it is equally available in law for the payment of debts" (a).

Thus nothing can be clearer than that an executor may go to market with his testator's assets, (even with a chattel specifically bequeathed (b),) and the purchaser will not be bound to see to the application of his purchase-money (c).

[But an executor or administrator cannot mortgage the assets to raise money for repairing or re-instating dilapidated buildings on leasehold property unless the testator or intestate was liable under covenants to execute the works (d).]

Fraud an exception.

31. But fraud and collusion will vitiate any transaction, and turn it to a mere colour (e), and therefore if fraud be proved, either expressed or implied, the parties cannot protect themselves by pleading the general rule (f). The only question is, What will amount to a case of fraud?

Sale by executor for payment of his own debt.

β. The executor may not sell or pledge the assets for raising money to carry on the testator's business, though in pursuance of the directions contained in his will, for the debts of the business are not the testator's debts, [and a direction by a testator that his trade shall be carried on by his executors does not authorize the employment in that trade of more of the testator's property than was employed by him in his business] (a). Nor may the executor sell or pledge in order to pay or secure his own debt (b), or for a debt wrongfully contracted by him as executor (c), for primâ facie this is a diversion of the assets to a purpose wholly foreign to the administration, and therefore a devastavit. "Though," observed Sir W. Grant, "it may be dangerous at all to restrain the power of purchasing from the executor, what inconvenience can there be in holding that the assets known to be such should not be applied in any case for the executor's debt, unless the creditor could be first satisfied of his right? It may be essential that the executor should have the power to sell the assets, but it is not essential that he should have the power to pay his own creditor; and it is not just that one man's property should be applied to the payment of another man's debt" (d).

Where the executor is specific or residuary legatee.

But if the executor be also the specific (e), or residuary legatee (f), then it seems to be established upon the authority of several cases that he may dispose of the chattel in payment of his own debt, for as soon as the debts and legacies of the testator have been discharged, the property is the executor's; and how is a purchaser to ascertain, but from the mouth of the executor, whether such prior liabilities upon the estate have been fully satisfied?

with others, or subject to certain charges under the will, then he has no power by himself to offer the chattel in payment of his own debt. For in what character does the executor sell? It must be either as executor or as legatee: but it is not as executor, for then he cannot pay his own debt with the testator's assets; nor is it as legatee, for he is not exclusively such, but only jointly with others, or subject to certain charges. The creditor therefore cannot deal for the chattel without the concurrence of the co-legatees, or of the other persons jointly entitled (a). And the mere representation by the executor that he is absolute owner under the will is no protection, for common prudence requires that the purchaser should look to the will himself and ascertain the fact; and if he neglect this precaution, and assume the executor's veracity, he must incur the hazard of the executor's falsehood (b).

Express notice that debts not paid.

The executor in his character of specific or residuary legatee cannot pay or secure the debt of his own creditor out of the testator's assets, if such creditor have express notice that any debt of the testator still remains unsatisfied (c).

Sale by executor for other private purposes.

γ. If the executor sell or mortgage for money either advanced at the time or to be advanced, the dealing primâ facie is in a due course of administration (d). "Where," observed Sir W. Grant, "a party having a debt due to him by the executor takes, in satisfaction of that debt, the assets which he knows belong to the executor only in that character, undoubtedly suspicion of fraud must always arise; but where a man is applied to for a loan of money there is no motive of fraud, for he may keep his money if not satisfied with the security" (e). But such is the primâ facie presumption only, for if there be legal evidence to the purchaser or mortgagee that the immediate or future advance is not on account of the testator's estate, but is meant to be applied to the private purposes of the executor, the Court must regard the transaction as fraudulent, and will not allow it to stand (f).

Sale of specific chattel, and notice that there are no debts.

δ. A purchaser cannot deal with an executor for the purchase of a chattel specifically bequeathed, if the purchaser have notice, (a fact, however, not easily to be proved, and not lightly to be presumed,) that there were no debts of the testator, or that they have since been discharged (a).

Payment to executor who will probably misapply it.

ε. If a person owe money to a testator's estate, and be apprised that the executor means to misapply it, he cannot safely hand it over (b).

Payment after long interval from testator's death.

ζ. If a great length of time has elapsed since the testator's death, it may be argued that here all debts must be presumed to be paid, and that the executor is a trustee for the next of kin, and that the money cannot be paid safely to any other than the next of kin as the cestui que trust. However, in the absence of all mala fides the executor's receipt will in general be sufficient. Where there had been a lapse of sixteen years, Lord Hatherley observed, "there is no authority for holding that merely because a debt to the testator's estate is not called in for some time, we are to imply that the executors have ceased to be executors, and have become trustees. A debtor who has been paying interest for perhaps twenty years, does not therefore become cognizant of the fact of all the testator's estate having been administered, and of the executors having become trustees. The persons with whom the executors are dealing, are not bound to know the state of the testator's assets, and it may be many years before all his debts are paid, and his estate wound up" (c). In a case where there had been a lapse of thirty-five years from the testator's death, and no allegation of debts, the late V. C. of England held that the executor could sign a receipt (d), [but as to real estate the rule has now been adopted that after twenty years it is fair to presume that the debts have been paid, and the onus is upon the executors selling under a charge of debts to show that such is not the case (e);

but the rule does not in general apply to the case of an executor selling the leaseholds of his testator (a).] As regards an administrator it will be remembered that all necessary protection is thrown around the estate by the bond taken for due administration, and also by the form of proceeding in the Probate Court; for if A., (to whose estate the money is payable) die, leaving B. his next of kin, who afterwards dies, leaving C. his next of kin, who afterwards dies, leaving D. his next of kin, in order to take out letters of administration to A., you must first show yourself to have an interest by taking out letters to B. And again, to take out letters to B. you must first, for the same reason, take out letters to C.; so that, in fact, letters cannot be taken out to A. without previously taking out letters to B. and C. If, in such a case, the receipt of A.'s administrator, even after the lapse of twenty years, were not sufficient, it would be necessary in a suit to make the administrators of B. and C. parties as cestuis que trust, a thing quite unheard of in practice. In an extreme case, however, where an administrator who was beneficially entitled to one-fourth, filed a bill one hundred and fifty years after the intestate's decease, the Court, while it admitted the plaintiff's legal title to the whole, refused to order payment to him of the other three-fourths, which apparently belonged in equity to other parties (b).

Sale by banker by direction of executor.

η. An agent is accountable to his principal only, and therefore if an executor employ a banker to sell out part of the testator's stock and remit the proceeds to him, it seems the banker, though he has reason to believe that a misapplication is intended, is bound to transfer the money to the executor, and does not thereby render himself accountable. A contrary doctrine would carry the principle of constructive trust to an inconvenient and, indeed, to an impracticable length (c); [and an agent is bound to accept as θ. Though an executor can make an assignment and give a receipt for purchase-money before probate, yet a purchaser is not bound to pay his purchase-money before probate, which is the evidence of the executor's title (c).

[Payment by order of executor.]

[32. If a person indebted to a testator's estate pays a third party by order of the executor, and obtains the executor's receipt without notice that the payment is wrongfully made, he thereby obtains a complete discharge (d).]

Who may impeach the sale.

33. Wherever, as in the several cases mentioned, there is suspicion of fraud, the transaction may be impeached by creditors (e), or specific (f), residuary (g), or even pecuniary legatees (h).

Effect of time.

But in no case will the Court grant relief where the right of case, before the House of Lords, the doctrine as laid down by Lord Cairns was, that on the one hand bankers were not on grounds of mere suspicion or curiosity, to refuse to honour the cheque of an executor or trustee, being their customer, and on the other hand, that bankers were not, under shelter of that title, to be at liberty to become parties or privies to a breach of trust, and to pay away trust money when they knew it was going to be misapplied, and for the purpose of its being so misapplied; and he stated the result of the cases to be, that to justify a banker in refusing payment, 1. There must be a misapplication or breach of trust actually intended, 2. The bankers must be privy to such intended misapplication or breach of trust, and 3. That any personal benefit to the bankers designed or stipulated for, would be the strongest evidence of such privity; Ib. p. 11. But the principle enunciated by Lord Westbury went further, for he said that a banker could not be allowed to set up the jus tertii against the order of his own customer, or refuse to honour his draft on any other ground than some sufficient one resulting from the act of the customer himself, and that if a banker became incidentally aware that a trustee, his customer, meditated a breach of trust, and drew a cheque for that purpose, the banker had no right to refuse payment of the cheque, as this would be making himself party to an inquiry as between his customer and third persons. But that if a trustee being indebted to a banker, applied part of the trust estate in the banker's hands to the payment of the debt, the banker became particeps criminis, and was answerable; Ib. p. 14. It would seem, therefore, that, in Lord Westbury's opinion, if the trustee did not himself confess the breach of trust, the banker could not refuse payment on evidence aliunde that a breach of trust was intended; and see Barnes v. Addy, 9 L. R. Ch. App. 244.

unravelling the transaction has been neglected for a period of twenty years (a).

Executor or administrator of a trustee.

34. The preceding powers belong to executors and administrators for the purpose of administration of the testator's or intestate's estates. But these powers cannot be assumed to exist where property, though legally vested in an executor or administrator, is not available for the ordinary purposes of administration. Thus the executor or administrator of a surviving trustee stands on no higher ground than an ordinary trustee, and cannot therefore pass a good title to the purchaser, unless it be warranted by the terms of the trust.

SECTION III.

DISABILITY OF TRUSTEES FOR SALE TO BECOME PURCHASERS OF THE TRUST PROPERTY.

We now come to the subject of purchases by trustees of the property vested in them upon trust.

Under this head it will be proper to consider, First, The extent and operation of the rule, that a trustee shall not purchase the trust estate; Secondly, The species of relief to which the cestui que trust is entitled; Thirdly, The time within which the cestui que trust must apply to the Court.

First. The extent of the rule.

Trustee for sale may not purchase.

1. A trustee for sale, that is, a trustee who is selling, is absolutely and entirely disabled from purchasing the trust property (b), whether it be real estate or a chattel personal (c), land, or a ground rent (d), in reversion or possession (e), whether the purchase be made in the trustee's own name or in the name of a trustee for him (a), directly, or indirectly, [as to a purchaser upon a contract or understanding (amounting to more than mere expectation) that the purchaser shall resell to the trustee (b),] by private contract or public auction (c), from himself as the single trustee, or with the sanction of his co-trustees (d); for he who undertakes to act for another in any matter cannot, in the same matter, act for himself (e). The situation of the trustee gives him an opportunity of knowing the value of the property, and as he acquires that knowledge at the expense of the cestui que trust, he is bound to apply it for the cestui que trust's benefit (f). Besides, if the trustee appeared at the auction professedly as a bidder, that would operate as a discouragement to others, who seeing the vendor ready to purchase at or above the real value, would feel a reluctance to enter into the competition, and so the sale would be chilled (g).

Trustee who has disclaimed.

But the rule does not apply to a person named as trustee, but who has disclaimed without having acted in the trust (h), [or to a person who has the power of becoming a trustee though he never actually does become one (i),] or to a tenant for life whose consent to the sale is required by the terms of the power (j); or to mere nominal trustees, as trustees to preserve contingent remainders (k); or where A. is the trustee in fee for B. in fee, and A. has no duty to perform (l); or where a trustee sells to the trustees of his own settlement under which he has a partial interest (a); [or to a company in which he is a shareholder (b).]

Lord Rosslyn's doctrine.

2. Lord Rosslyn is reported to have considered that to invalidate a purchase by a trustee it was necessary to show that he had gained an actual advantage (c); but the doctrine (if any such was ever held by his Lordship (d)) has since been expressly and unequivocally denied (e). The rule is now universal, that, however fair the transaction, the cestui que trust is at liberty to set aside the sale and take back the property (f). If a trustee were permitted to buy in an honest case, he might buy in a case having that appearance, but which, from the infirmity of human testimony, might be grossly otherwise (g). Thus a trustee for the sale of an estate might, by the knowledge acquired by him in that character, have discovered a valuable coal mine under it, and, locking that up in his own breast, might enter into a contract for the purchase by himself. In such a case, if the trustee chose to deny it, how could the Court establish the fact against the denial? The probability is that a trustee who had once conceived such a purpose would never disclose it, and the cestui que trust would be effectually defrauded (h).

Trustee may not buy as agent.

3. As a trustee cannot buy on his own account, it follows that he cannot be permitted to buy as agent for a third person: the Court can with as little effect examine how far the trustee has made an undue use of information acquired by him in the course of his duty in the one case as in the other (i).

Agent of trustee may not buy.

4. And the rule against purchasing the trust property applies to an agent employed by the trustee for the purposes of the sale, as strongly as to the trustee himself (a). And an agent not for sale, but for management only (b), [a solicitor or counsel (c),] and a receiver appointed by the Court (d) stand in a confidential relation, and cannot purchase without putting themselves at arm's length, and a full disclosure of their knowledge; [and the partner of a trustee, or any other person through whom the trustee may directly or indirectly derive benefit by reason of the purchase, cannot purchase the trust property from the trustee (e).]

Trustees may not lease to themselves.

5. The lease of an estate is in fact the sale of a partial interest in it, and therefore trustees for sale cannot demise to one of themselves, but the lessee, while he shall be held to his bargain if disadvantageous to him, shall be made to account for the profits if it be in his favour (f).

Specific performance.

6. Where a trustee for sale was the purchaser by an agent at the auction, the heir of the trustee had no right to have the contract completed at the expense of the personal estate, though the cestuis que trust were willing to acquiesce in the sale (g).

Trustee may purchase from the cestui que trust.

7. When it is said that a trustee for sale may not purchase the trust property, the meaning must be understood to be that the trustee may not purchase from himself, that is, he cannot perform the two functions of seller and buyer; for there is no rule that a trustee, whether for sale or otherwise, may not purchase from his cestui que trust (h). Hence, while a purchase by a trustee conducting the sale, either personally or by his agent, cannot stand, a purchase by a trustee from a cestui que trust of the interest of the latter in the trust may stand, if the trustee can show that the fullest information and every advantage were given to the cestui que trust (a). However, a purchase by a trustee from his cestui que trust is at all times a transaction of great nicety, and one which the Courts will watch with the utmost jealousy (b), [and will set aside if the consideration was insufficient (c);] and the exception runs, it is said, so near the verge of the rule, that it might as well have been included within it (d).

The relation of trustee and cestui que trust must first be dissolved.

8. Before any dealing with the cestui que trust, the relation between the trustee and cestui que trust must be actually or virtually dissolved. The trustee may, if he pleases, retire from the office, and qualify himself for becoming a purchaser by divesting himself of that character (e), or if he retain the situation, the parties must be put so much at arm's length, that they agree to stand in the adverse situations of vendor and purchaser (f), the cestui que trust distinctly and fully understanding that he is selling to the trustee, and consenting to waive all objections upon that ground (g), and the trustee fairly and honestly disclosing all the necessary particulars of the estate, and not attempting a furtive advantage to himself by means of any private information (h). The trustee will not be allowed to go on acquainting himself with the nature of the property up to the moment of sale, and then, casting aside his character of trustee, turn his experience to his own account (i).

Instances where trustee has been allowed to purchase.

9. In what cases a trustee will be at liberty to become a purchaser, may be best illustrated by a few instances.

Where the cestui que trust took the whole management of the sale himself, chose, or at least approved, the auctioneer, made surveys, settled the plan of sale, fixed the price, and so had a perfect knowledge of the value of the property, and then by his agent, but with his own personal consent, agreed to sell a lot which had been bought in to one of the trustees for sale acting as agent for another, Lord Eldon said, that if in any instance the rule was to be relaxed by consent of the parties, this was the case, and decreed the agreement to be specifically performed (a).

Again, a cestui que trust had strongly urged the purchase upon one of his trustees, who at first expressed an unwillingness, but afterwards, upon being pressed, agreed to the terms; and the sale was supported (b).

So, where a trustee for sale had endeavoured in vain to dispose of the estate, and then purchased himself of the cestui que trust, at a fair and adequate price, and there was no imputation of fraud or concealment, Lord Northington said he did not "like the circumstance of a trustee dealing with his cestui que trust, but upon the whole, he did not see any principle upon which he could set the transaction aside" (c).

Solicitor of the cestui que trust.

10. It has been pronounced too dangerous to allow the cestui que trust's solicitor, without a special authority, to bind his employer by such a contract with the trustee (d).

Creditors.

11. Where the cestuis que trust are creditors, it has been held that the trustee cannot purchase with the sanction of the major part of them, but that the liberty must be given by the unanimous voice of the whole body (e). However, the Court has sanctioned purchases of a bankrupt's estate by assignees, where the assent of a general meeting of creditors had been obtained (f); and the Court would, no doubt, in executing the trust of a creditors' deed, allow a trustee to purchase, if it were really for the benefit of the creditors.

Court will not authorise the trustee to bid.

12. The Court has no jurisdiction on behalf of the cestuis que trust who are sui juris to authorise a trustee to bid, for that is a question the cestuis que trust are entitled to decide for themselves (g). So far as the Court is concerned, it will not give a trustee leave to bid, for it is his duty to communicate all the information he can for the benefit of the sale, and this he might not be disposed to do if he were allowed to purchase himself (h). But if a sale by auction under the direction of the Court has been tried in vain, the trustee is at liberty to make proposals on his own behalf, and the Court may be induced to accept the offer (a).

[Effect of leave to bid.]

[13. Where, in an administration action, leave was given to the solicitor for the defendant (the executor) to bid at the sale, which was to be conducted by the plaintiffs' solicitors, independently of the executor, it was held that the effect of the leave was to put an end to the fiduciary relation in which he formerly stood, and to place him in the position of a mere stranger, and that he was under no obligation to disclose to the Court any facts within his knowledge affecting the value of the property. But if the intending purchaser lays information on any particular subject before the Court for the purpose of guiding its discretion and obtaining its approval of the sale, he is bound to disclose all the material facts within his knowledge relating to that subject; but it does not follow that because information on some material point or points is offered or is given on request by a purchaser from the Court, it must therefore be given on all others as to which it is neither offered nor requested, and concerning which there is no implicit representation, positive or negative, direct or indirect, in what is actually stated (b).]

Where cestuis que trust are infants.

14. If the cestuis que trust be under disability, as infants, the trustee, as he cannot be released from the liabilities of his situation, cannot by any act in pais become the purchaser of the estate (c); but, if it be absolutely necessary that the property should be sold, and the trustee is ready to give more than any one else, he may institute proceedings in equity, and apply to the Court to be allowed to purchase, and the Court will then examine into the circumstances, ask who had the conduct of the transaction, whether there is reason to suppose the premises could be sold better, and upon the result of that inquiry will let another person prepare the particulars of sale, and allow the trustee to bid (d); and, generally, if the Court can see clearly that under the circumstances of the case it would be for the benefit of the cestui que trust that the trustee should purchase (as at a certain sum beyond what could be obtained elsewhere), the Court would sanction a sale to the trustee (e).

The principles laid down with reference to trustees for sale are of course applicable to all who, though differing in name, are invested with the like fiduciary character, as executors and administrators (a), an executor in his own wrong (b), trustees for creditors (c), an agent (d), &c.; but a mortgagee may purchase from his mortgagor (e), surviving partners may purchase from the representatives of a deceased partner (f), [the trustee in the joint bankruptcy of surviving partners, who have a large claim against the estate of the deceased partner, may purchase from the representatives of the deceased partner (g),] and the creditor taking out execution is not precluded from becoming the purchaser of the property upon a sale by the sheriff (h); [and a person named as executor, but who, in fact, never proves the will, is not precluded from purchasing from the executor who proves (i).]

with interest (a), and, if he was in actual possession, being charged with an occupation rent (b). [But if the consideration passing from the trustee is not wholly pecuniary, and the cestui que trust has by subsequent dealings put it out of his power to restore to the trustee the benefits derived from him, he has lost his right to set aside the transaction (c).]

Allowances for repairs.

2. The trustee will have all just allowances made to him for improvements and repairs which are substantial and lasting (d), or such as have a tendency to bring the estate to a better sale (e), as in one case for a mansion house erected, plantations of shrubs, &c. (f); and in estimating the improvements, the buildings pulled down, if they were incapable of repair, will be valued as old materials, but otherwise they will be valued as buildings standing (g). Should the property have been deteriorated by the acts of the trustee, his purchase-money will suffer a proportionate reduction (h). [And if the subject-matter of the sale be a business sold as a going concern, and the purchasing trustee carry it on under his own personal direction, on the sale being set aside he will be allowed to deduct from the profits all outgoings for wages of assistants, expenditure for stock, &c., but will not be allowed any salary for his own management of the business (i).]

Case of actual fraud.

3. Where the contract is vitiated by the presence of actual fraud, allowance will still be made to the trustee for necessary repairs (j), and in one case allowance was also made for improvements (k); but in another case of actual fraud the Court refused any allowance for improvements. "If," said Lord Fitzgibbon, "a man has acquired an estate by rank and abominable fraud, and shall afterwards expend the money in improving the estate, is he therefore to retain it in his hands against the lawful proprietor? If such a rule should prevail, it would justify a proposition I once heard at the bar, that the common equity of the country was to improve the right owner out of the possession of his estate" (l).

Trustee paying purchase-money into Court.

4. A trustee, the sale having taken place during the pendency of a suit, had paid part of his purchase-money into Court, which had been invested in the funds. On the purchase being set aside, the trustee claimed the benefit of the rise of the stock, but it was held that he was entitled only to his purchase-money with interest, for had there occurred a fall of the stock, he could not have been compelled to submit to the loss (a).

Trustee to be discharged from the sale immediately.

5. If the trustee is to be discharged from the situation of purchaser, he is to be discharged at once, and the Court will order an immediate re-conveyance upon immediate repayment of the money (b).

Lessees not prejudiced.

6. The reconveyance of the estate will be without prejudice to the titles and interests of lessees and others who have contracted with the trustee bonâ fide before the pendency of the suit (c).

Of submitting the estate to a re-sale.

7. But the cestui que trust, particularly where the assignee in bankruptcy has become the purchaser, may claim, not a re-conveyance of the specific estate, but a re-sale of the property under the direction of the Court. The terms of the re-sale have not always been uniform. In Whelpdale v. Cookson (d), Lord Hardwicke said the majority of the creditors should elect whether the purchase should stand; so that should they elect to re-sell, and the estate should be sold at a still lower price, the creditors would suffer. The doctrine of Lord Thurlow appears to have been, that the property should be put up at the price at which the trustee purchased, and if any advance was made, the sale should take effect, but if no bidding, the trustee should be held to his bargain (e). Lord Alvanley followed the authority of Lord Hardwicke, and directed an inquiry whether it was for the benefit of the infants that the premises should be re-sold, and, if for their benefit, that the sale should be made (f). "To this principle," said Lord Eldon, "the objection is that a great temptation to purchase is offered to trustees, the question whether the re-sale would be advantageous to the cestui que trust being of necessity determined at the hazard of a wrong determination" (g). Lord Eldon therefore conceived it best to adopt the rule of Lord Thurlow, and so he decreed in Ex parte Hughes (a), and Ex parte Lacey (b). Sir W. Grant, in a subsequent case (c), said he was not aware that Lord Eldon had laid down any general rule as to the terms; but a few days after, having consulted the Lord Chancellor upon the subject, and discovering his mistake, he framed his decree in conformity with the Lord Chancellor's decisions. The same principle has since been followed in numerous other cases (d), and the practice may be considered as settled.

Allowances for repairs, &c.

8. Should the trustee have repaired or improved the estate, the expense of the repairs and improvements, if allowed, will be added to the purchase-money, and the estate be put up at the accumulated sum (e).

Re-selling in lots.

9. Where the trustee has purchased in one lot, the cestui que trust cannot insist on a re-sale in different lots. If desirous of reselling the property in that mode, they must pay the trustee his principal and interest, and then, as the absolute owners, they may sell as they please (f).

Difficulty of Lord Hardwicke's rule.

10. In the application of Lord Hardwicke's rule it was a question constantly occurring, whether the body of creditors at large could be bound by the resolution of the majority to insist upon a re-sale; but by the practice of Lord Eldon, the difficulty on that head is avoided (g), for as the creditors cannot by possibility sustain an injury, it is competent to any individual creditor to try the experiment (h).

The remedy against trustee who has sold the property.

11. If before the cestui que trust commences proceedings for relief the trustee has passed the estate into the hands of a purchaser without notice, the cestui que trust may compel the trustee to account for the difference of price (i), or for the difference between the sum the trustee paid and the real value of the estate at the time of the purchase (j), with interest at 4 per cent. (k).

Purchase of shares by a trustee.

in Scotch mines, part of the assets, and afterwards sold them to a stranger at a considerable advance of price, and Lord Thurlow decreed the trustee to account for every advantage he had made, but said he could not go the length of ordering the defendant to replace the shares. He conceived the plaintiff, one of the next of kin, had no such election of choosing between the specific thing and the advantage made of it (a).

Costs.

13. The costs of the suit will, as a general rule, follow the decree—that is, if the trustee be compelled to give up his purchase, unless his conduct was perfectly honourable and the sale is set aside on the mere dry rule of equity (b), he must pay the expenses he has himself occasioned (c); and if the charge be unfounded, the costs must be paid by the plaintiff. But if there be great delay on the part of the cestui que trust, the costs will be refused him, though he succeed in the suit (d); and, on the other hand, if the suit be dismissed, not because the transaction was not originally impeachable, but merely on account of the great interval of time, the Court may refuse to order the plaintiff to pay the costs of the defendant (e).

Where the sale is set aside after the purchaser's death.

14. If the trustee devise the estate purchased by him, and the purchase is set aside as against the devisee, it is conceived that as the devise carried all the testator's interest in the property the monies repaid will belong to the devisee. But if the trustee die intestate, then whether monies repaid shall belong to the next of kin or the heir of the trustee is a question of great difficulty. In favour of the former it may be urged, that as there is no equity between the heir-at-law and next of kin, the monies repaid being in fact personal estate must belong to the next of kin: that the Court rescinds the transaction by taking an account of rents and allowing 4 per cent. interest on the purchase-money from the time of the purchase, and that the rents and interest accrued during the life of the intestate must certainly be regarded as personal estate, and that the right of the next of kin is supported by Lawes v. Bennett (f), and other cases, where a lessee has an option of purchasing and the option is exercised after the death of the lessor, in which case there is a retrospective conversion.

(f) 1 Cox, 167.

On the other hand, it may be argued that a purchase by a trustee is not void but voidable only, and that the heir is clearly not bound to account for the rents while he was in possession, and that the Court takes an account of rent and interest ab initio, not for the purpose of increasing the trustee's personal estate, but for measuring the price which the cestui que trust must pay for recovering the estate; that the heir takes all the title which the intestate could give him, subject to an equity subsisting in another, to wrest the estate from him upon certain terms, and that the monies repaid are in fact the estate, after satisfying the outstanding claims: that the cases decided upon contract have no application, as the monies are here repaid contrary to the contract: that a different doctrine would lead to great inconvenience in adjusting the accounts of rent and interest, and also from intermediate settlements or other dispositions by the heir; it would be very hard, for instance, that purchasers under a marriage settlement, with constructive notice, should, because they cannot have the whole benefit, be deprived of every benefit. The inclination of the author's opinion is in favour of the real representative, but the point remains to be decided.

Thirdly. As to the time within which the sale may be set aside.

Cestui que trust must set aside the sale in reasonable time.

1. If the cestui que trust desire to set aside the purchase, he must make his application to the Court in reasonable time, or he will not be entitled to relief (a). A long acquiescence under a sale to a trustee is treated as evidence that the relation between the trustee and cestui que trust had been previously abandoned, and that in all other respects the purchase was fairly conducted (b).

What considered a reasonable time.

2. A sale cannot, in general, be set aside after a lapse of twenty years (c); but in these cases the Court does not confine itself to that period by analogy to the Statute of Limitations, for relief has been refused after an acquiescence of eighteen years (d); and seventeen years (e); and it is presumed that even a shorter period would be a bar to the remedy, where the cestui que trust could offer no excuse for his laches (a). However, the sale has been opened after an interval of ten years (b), and eleven years (c); and even after a much greater lapse of time where the executor had purchased in the names of trustees for himself, and the transaction was attended with circumstances of disguise and concealment (d).

Of persons under disability.

3. Persons not sui juris, as femes covert and infants, cannot be precluded from relief on the ground of acquiescence during the continuance of the disability (e). But femes covert as to property settled to their separate use, [or belonging to them as their separate property under the Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (f),] if their power of anticipation be not restricted, are regarded as femes sole (g).

Time allowed to a class of persons.

4. A class of persons, as creditors, cannot be expected in the prosecution of their common interest to exert the same vigour and activity as individuals would do in the pursuit of their exclusive rights (h). Accordingly creditors have succeeded in their suits after a laches of twelve years (i); but even creditors will be barred of their remedy if they be chargeable with very gross laches, as with acquiescence in the sale for a period of thirty-three years (j).

Time no bar where circumstances not known.

5. For laches to operate as a bar, it must be shown that the cestui que trust knew the trustee was the purchaser; for while the cestui que trust continues ignorant of that fact, he cannot be blamed for not having quarrelled with the sale (k).

Distress of cestui que trust.

6. The effect of the length of time may also be materially influenced by the continued distress of the cestui que trust (l), but poverty is merely an ingredient in the case, and will not alone displace the bar (m).

Confirmation of the sale.

7. Of course the cestui que trust may ratify the sale to the trustee by an express and actual confirmation (a); and if the cestui que trust choose to confirm it, he cannot afterwards annul his own act on the ground of no adequate consideration (b). But—

Requisites of good confirmation.

a. The confirming party must be sui juris—not labouring under any disability, as infancy or coverture (c). But, in the case of real estate a feme covert can, if it be not settled to her separate use without anticipation, confirm the purchase under the operation of the Fines and Recoveries Act (d). And in confirmation, as in acquiescence, a feme covert who has property, whether real or personal, settled to her separate use, [or belonging to her as her separate property under the recent Act (e),] (provided her power of anticipation be not restrained), has, to the extent of her interest in the property, all the capacity of a feme sole (f).

β. The confirmation must be a solemn and deliberate act, not, for instance, fished out from loose expressions in a letter (g); and particularly where the original transaction was infected with fraud, the confirmation of it is so inconsistent with justice, and so likely to be accompanied with imposition, that the Court will watch it with the utmost strictness, and not allow it to stand but on the very clearest evidence (h).

γ. There must be no suppressio veri or suggestio falsi, but the cestui que trust must be honestly made acquainted with all the material circumstances of the case (i).

δ. It has been laid down that the confirming party must not be ignorant of the law, that is, he must be aware that the transaction is of such a character that he could impeach it in a Court of Equity (j); but it [has been] doubted whether this view is consistent with the established doctrine, that mistake of law as distinguished from mistake of fact forms no ground for relief (a).

ε. The confirmation must be wholly distinct from and independent of the original contract (b)—not a conveyance of the estate executed in pursuance of a covenant in the original deed for further assurance (c).

ζ. The confirmation must not be wrung from the cestui que trust by distress or terror (d).

η. Where the cestuis que trust are a class of persons, as creditors, the sanction of the major part will not be obligatory on the rest, but the confirmation to be complete, must be the joint act of the whole body (e).

CHAPTER XIX.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR PURCHASE.

A TRUST for purchase is not so frequent as a trust for sale, and yet occurs often enough to merit a separate consideration.

Trustees liable for consequences of breach of duty.

1. The general rule is that trustees for purchase, like all other trustees, are bound to discharge the duty prescribed, and failing to do so are answerable for the consequences; as, if a specific fund be bequeathed to trustees upon trust to lay out on a purchase, and they neglect to call in the fund and lay it out, they are liable to compensate the cestuis que trust for the consequences (a).

May enter into a previous contract.

2. It is almost unnecessary to premise, that trustees for purchase are not confined to the mere act of paying the purchase-money and taking a conveyance, but may in the ordinary course of business, enter into a previous written contract as a preliminary to the purchase.

Must see to value.

3. A material point to which trustees of this kind have to advert is the intrinsic value of the estate proposed to be bought, and, to arrive at a sound conclusion on this head, they must employ a valuer of their own (b), and must not rely upon any valuation made on behalf of the vendor; "Nothing," said Lord Romilly, "is more uncertain than a valuation, and the Court has constantly to observe upon the great discrepancy between valuations made by those persons who want to enhance, and by those persons who want to depreciate the value of the property. A man bonâ fide forms his opinion, but he looks at the case in a totally different way, when he knows on whose behalf he is acting;" and in reference to the case of a loan by trustees on mortgage (which is not on principle distinguishable from a

(a) Craven v. Craddock, W. N. 1868, p. 229.

[(b) In Fry v. Tapson, 28 Ch. D. 268; it was held that the appointment of the valuer could not be left to the trustees' solicitor, but that the trustees were bound to exercise their own judgment as to the selection of a valuer, see ante, p. 356.]

purchase) he added, "a trustee cannot with propriety lend trust money on mortgage upon a valuation made by or on behalf of the mortgagor. If he does so, and the valuer has bonâ fide valued the property at double its value, the trustee must take the consequences: he ought to have employed a valuer on his own behalf to see to it" (a).

There must be a good title.

4. Another question of importance is that of title. Every direction or authority to lay out trust money upon a purchase of real estate, carries with it the tacit condition that there shall be a good title. Whether, therefore, the trustees are proposing to purchase by private contract or by auction, they must take care not to bind themselves by any agreement which shall preclude them from requiring a good marketable title. If the intended contract or conditions of sale contain anything of a special character, the trustees should lay them before their counsel for his opinion, whether the stipulations are consistent with their trust (b). Formerly a good marketable title was one traced back for a period of sixty years, but by 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, s. 1, a forty years' title has now been substituted. [And by the Trustee Act, 1888 (c), section 4, sub-s. 3, it is now provided that "no trustee shall be chargeable with breach of trust only upon the ground that, in effecting the purchase of any property, or in lending money upon the security of any property, he shall have accepted a shorter title than the title which a purchaser is, in the absence of a special contract, entitled to require, if in the opinion of the Court the title accepted be such as a person acting with prudence and caution would have accepted."

[Conditions incorporated in the contract.]

5. The 2nd section of the Act 37 & 38 Vict. c. 78, as to contracts for sale made after the 31st December, 1874, and the 3rd section of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (d), as to contracts for sale made after the 31st December, 1881, incorporate in such contracts various conditions and stipulations (e) unless the same are expressly excluded, and by the 3rd section of the former Act and the 66th section of the latter Act trustees who are purchasers are authorised to buy without excluding the application of the Acts, and the 66th section of the latter Act expressly

(a) Ingle v. Partridge, 34 Beav. 412-414; [but see Re Godfrey, 23 Ch. D. 483, where trustees were held not liable though they had not made an independent valuation, and in all cases the true test seems to be whether the trustees have acted as prudent men would in dealing with their own property; see ante, p. 354.]

(b) See Eastern Counties Railway Company v. Hawkes, 5 H. L. Cas. 363.

[(c) 51 & 52 Vict. c. 59.]

[(e) For these conditions and stipulations see ante, p. 485, et seq.]

exonerates trustees and their solicitors from all liability for so doing, but nothing in that Act is to be taken to imply that the adoption in connection with or application to any contract or transaction of any further or other provisions, stipulations, or words is improper.

[Official searches.]

6. Sect. 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882 (a) provides for an official search being made on the request of a purchaser for entries of judgments, Crown debts, and similar matters, and provides that when a solicitor acting for trustees obtains an office copy certificate of the result of the search under the section the trustees shall not be answerable for any loss that may arise from error in the certificate.

[Yorkshire Register.]

7. As to lands situate in Yorkshire, "The Yorkshire Registries Act, 1884" (b), provides for an official search of the register being made at the request of any person, and further exempts any trustee, executor, or other person in a fiduciary position who has obtained a certificate of the result of an official search or a certified copy of any document enrolled in the register, or of any entry in the register from any loss, damage, or injury that may arise from any error in such certificate or copy. And where a deed or will has been enrolled at full length, the comparison of an abstract with the copy so enrolled is to be a sufficient discharge of the duty to compare the abstract with the original document.]

Deposit.

8. As a deposit is almost invariably required upon a sale by auction, and not uncommonly by private contract, it is conceived that trustees would be justified upon signing the contract in paying a deposit in part discharge de bene esse of the purchase-money. But generally the character of trustee is pleaded as an excuse for not paying a deposit, and is allowed.

Where purchase-money is in Court.

9. Where the money is in Court the trustee must enter into a conditional contract, that is, "subject to the approbation of the Court," and then apply by petition or summons at chambers for the Court's sanction, and the practice is to direct an inquiry whether the proposed purchase is fit and proper, and if so, whether a good title can be made. "As long," said Sir G. Jessel, "as an estate is under the administration of the Court, the Court does not allow a purchase or mortgage or any other investment to be made, without seeing to its safety. The Court has to protect the property for all claimants, and a reference is made to ascertain the propriety of the investment, that is to say, its propriety in all respects" (a). And the practice is not to inquire whether a good title can be made subject to the conditions, but whether a good title can be made absolutely, and if in the course of investigation an objection to the title arises, it is brought under the attention of the judge, who then exercises his discretion (the whole title being before him), whether the objection can be waived with reasonable safety (b). "Much too great laxity," observed V. C. Wood, "has been gaining ground amongst the advisers of those who have to manage trust property, and there is a disposition to rest satisfied with imperfect titles. I cannot approve of such a practice, and cannot permit trustees to take a defective title, even though it may be in accordance with the contract" (c).

How purchase will affect the interest of cestuis que trust.

10. Trustees for purchase have to look not only to the adequacy of the value and the goodness of the title, but also to the effect which the purchase will have upon the relative interests of the cestuis que trust.

Purchase of houses.

Thus where the property is directed by the settlement to be held in trust for a person for life with remainders over, a trustee might no doubt purchase an estate with a suitable house upon it, but (without saying that he could not legally do so) he ought not to purchase a house merely. This is a property of a wasting nature, and the tenant for life could not be compelled to preserve it against natural decay. A power to invest on Government Annuities would not justify the purchase of Long Annuities, and there is a similar difference between land and houses, the former being worth about thirty years' purchase, and the latter much less, so that the tenant for life would be benefited at the expense of the remainderman (d).

Ground rents.

11. Even a purchase of ground rents of houses, though coming under the description in the trust deed of "hereditaments," is not free from objection, for the object would of course be to procure for the tenant for life a higher income, but this would be at the cost of the remainderman in point of security. Should the houses be burnt down, and should the lessee have neglected to insure or the insurance monies not be forthcoming, the trustee might have nothing to show for the purchase but a worthless site, and then the remainderman might seek to hold him responsible as for a fraudulent execution of his trust in equity, though the purchase was within the words of the trust according to the letter (a). However, it has been held that the purchase of freehold ground rents reserved upon building leases for ninety-nine years is justifiable under a power to purchase "hereditaments in fee-simple in possession" (b).

A timbered estate.

12. Again, if a sum be given to be laid out in the purchase of an estate to be settled on a person for life without impeachment of waste, with remainders over, trustees should not purchase a wood estate, as the tenant for life, on being put into possession, could by a fall of the timber possess himself of a great part of the capital or corpus of the fund (c); and, on the contrary, if the tenant for life were impeachable for waste, he would lose the fruit of so much as was the value of the timber (d). But trustees may purchase an estate where the timber forms no overwhelming proportion of the value, for it cannot be supposed that the trustees were meant to purchase land without trees upon it.

Mines.

13. Trustees again should not purchase mines; for if the mines be open, the tenant for life might exhaust them, and leave nothing to the remainderman; and if not open, the tenant for life, if impeachable for waste, would get nothing and the remainderman would take the whole (e). But under special circumstances the Court has sanctioned the purchase of mines (f).

Advowsons.

14. Advowsons again would be very undesirable as a purchase, for though the advowson or any particular presentation (before a vacancy) might be sold, there would be no annual or regular fruit. The remainderman, after the tenant for life's death, might sell the advowson and get back all he was entitled to; but in the meantime the tenant for life would be reaping no benefit.

Copyholds for lives.

15. Copyholds for lives, if customarily renewable, might substantially be equal to freeholds, but they would not fall within the terms of a trust to purchase estates of inheritance (g).

[(d) But see now 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, s. 35, under which a tenant for life impeachable for waste in respect of timber may cut and sell ripe timber and will be entitled to one-fourth of the proceeds.]

[(e) But see now 45 & 46 Vict. c. 38, ss. 6–11, under which the tenant for life whether impeachable for waste or not may grant mining leases, and will be entitled to one-fourth or three-fourths of the mineral rents as the case may be.]

Trustees buying from one of themselves.

16. Trustees having a trust or power to purchase must exercise a joint discretion as to the propriety of the purchase, and, therefore, as no man can be judge in his own case, they are precluded from buying from one of themselves. If such a purchase be really desirable, it might be carried out by a friendly suit for obtaining the sanction of the Court.

Consent of tenant for life.

17. A trust or power to purchase is sometimes accompanied with a condition that it shall be with the consent of the tenant for life. In such a case can the trustees purchase from the tenant for life himself? It is now settled that trustees with a similar power of sale and exchange can either sell to or exchange with the tenant for life (a), but this has always been regarded as hardly defensible on principle, and as an exception to the general rule. An exchange is in substance nothing more than a mutual sale, and when the simple case of a purchase by trustees from a tenant for life with power of consenting comes before the Court, it may be upheld, but in the meantime it would not be prudent for trustees, before actual decision, to incur the risk.

Equity of redemption.

18. Trustees, without a special power for the purpose, ought not to purchase an equity of redemption merely (b), for the mortgagee might seek to foreclose, when there might be a difficulty of redeeming, or might sell over the heads of the trustees under the power of sale, or might consolidate his mortgage with some other mortgage on another estate of the mortgagor, and so oblige the trustees to redeem both. [Nor will the trustees be justified in purchasing an equity of redemption merely because their investments comprise a second mortgage on the property, and they are impowered to invest upon freehold, leasehold, and chattel real securities, "including equitable mortgages by deposit," with the usual power to vary investments (c)].

Should always get the legal estate.

19. It would not be too much to lay down the rule broadly that trustees should never purchase without getting the legal estate.

Repairs and improvements.

20. A trust to buy an estate will not justify the investment of part of the trust fund upon a purchase, and the expenditure of a further part upon repairs and improvements, however substantial, either of the purchased estate (a), or of an estate settled to the like uses (b). But in a recent case where money was bequeathed to be laid out on a purchase of land to be annexed to a settled estate, and part of the settled estate was the advowson of a rectory of which the parsonage house was so dilapidated as to require rebuilding, which the testator had contemplated, V. C. Malins held that the proposed expenditure was within the spirit of the trust, and that the trustees would be justified in applying a competent part of the trust fund for the purpose (c). And monies liable to be laid out on a purchase of lands to be settled to certain uses may be laid out in the erection of new buildings, though not in the repair of old buildings on the lands settled to those uses (d), [or in draining the lands in settlement (e), and under its original jurisdiction the Court can sanction the expenditure of settled money in repairs necessary for the preservation of real estate settled in the same way (f).

[Settled Land Act.]

21. Now, by the Settled Land Act, 1882, sect. 33, money in the hands of trustees, and liable to be laid out in the purchase of land to be made subject to the settlement, may, at the option of the tenant for life, be invested or applied as capital money arising under the Act, and under this it may be made applicable for the improvements authorised by the Act (g). And under the Extraordinary Tithe Rent-charge Act, 1886 (h), money applicable to the purchase of land to be settled to or on any uses or trusts, is applicable in or towards the redemption of an "extraordinary charge" (a), or a rent-charge under the Act on land settled to or on the like uses or trusts.]

Estates in possession.

22. When the trust is to purchase an estate "in possession," it would not be competent to trustees to buy an estate in reversion; but, as already observed, under a power to purchase "hereditaments in fee simple in possession," trustees may buy ground-rents reserved upon building leases for ninety-nine years (b). But where the leases are of short duration, and the ground-rents are low as compared with the rental of the property when it falls into possession, the purchase of the ground-rents would be for the advantage of the remaindermen at the expense of the tenant for life.

Fund in Court.

23. Where the trust fund is in Court, it is still the duty of the trustees to watch the administration, and see that the purchase is a proper one, unless all the beneficiaries, whether under disability or not, are before the Court, and then the cestuis que trust by themselves or their guardians can look after their own interests, and the trustees are exonerated (c).

Costs.

24. The costs of the purchase are to be considered as part of it, and will come out of the same fund. The trustees, therefore, should provide for the costs, as well as for the purchase-money, though if this were not done, they would still have a lien for the costs properly incurred upon the estate purchased (d).

Whether trust to be disclosed.

25. The trustees, where the money is not under administration by the Court, need not disclose the trust to the vendor, either in the contract or in the conveyance. If they do so, it will embarrass the vendor by obliging him to see that the purchase-money is properly applied in pursuance of the trust.

Declaration of trust.

26. Where the legal estate is required to be vested in the trustees, they should, contemporaneously with the completion of the purchase, execute a formal declaration of trust, either by indorsement on the conveyance or by a separate instrument with notice of it indorsed on the conveyance, as otherwise the survivor would have it in his power to deal with the property as his own. Where notice of the trust to the vendor cannot be avoided, the declaration of trust may be embodied in the conveyance itself. This to some extent lengthens the conveyance, and the vendor might in strictness claim the extra costs; but such a claim is very seldom, if ever, heard of in practice.

Consequences of no declaration of trust.

27. A declaration of trust, or some notice tantamount to it, not only obviates fraud on the part of the trustee, but is also desirable on another account. If the estate purchased be not car-marked at the time as subject to the trust, serious questions might afterwards arise between the cestuis que trust and the representatives of the trustee, who are the persons entitled to the property, viz., whether the estate was purchased with the trust fund or from the trustee's private resources, and the evidence upon this issue might entail infinite expense (a).

[Trustee providing part of purchase-money.]

[28. Where an estate is purchased by trustees, but, the trust funds being insufficient to provide the whole purchase-money, one of the trustees provides the sum necessary to complete the purchase, the trust estate is entitled to a first charge upon the estate for the amount of the trust fund, and subject to such charge the trustee is entitled to be indemnified out of the estate in respect of the sum provided by him, and subject to such indemnity the real estate belongs to the trust (b).]

Whether the settlement should be in the conveyance.

29. Where the legal estate is not required to be vested in the trustees, but is to be limited to the use of the beneficiaries, the first question is, whether the limitations should be inserted in the conveyance itself, or whether the conveyance should be to the trustees, and a settlement executed subsequently. The answer must depend on the particular circumstances of each case, and whether the vendor will or not offer any objection, though it is conceived that on the purchaser undertaking to pay any extra costs to be thereby occasioned, the vendor could not object.

Whether to be referential.

30. Another practical question is, whether the limitations of the settlement to which the new purchase is to be subjected should be set out at length, or be incorporated by reference. In either case the trustees must be careful to ascertain the facts, as for instance, whether the owners of the successive estates have in any and what way dealt with their respective interests.

Form of referential settlement.

31. If it be proposed to settle the property by referential words, caution must be used so as to preserve the rights of the beneficiaries intact. Suppose, for instance, the trustees of a marriage settlement of real estate had disposed of it under a power of sale and had laid out the proceeds in the purchase of another estate, and then granted the new property to A. and his heirs "to the uses and upon the trusts," &c., of the original settlement. If in this case a term of years was limited by the original settlement to trustees, who have subsequently died, no new term will be created, or if any tenant for life or remainderman had sold his interest, he would, nevertheless, take the like estate again, and the purchaser could have only an equity. It is impossible to provide à priori any form that would adapt itself to all cases; but the following, which was settled by two eminent conveyancers, in a case where part of the settled estates had been sold and the proceeds re-invested, may be usefully inserted. The habendum was "to such uses as under and by virtue of the said indenture of settlement are now subsisting in the thereby settled hereditaments (now remaining unsold), and so that the said hereby assured hereditaments shall upon the execution of these presents be vested in the persons in whom the said thereby settled hereditaments (now remaining unsold) are now vested, and for the same estates and interests as are now vested in those persons respectively in the same hereditaments under or in consequence of that indenture, and shall be subject to the same trusts, powers and provisions as the said thereby settled hereditaments (now remaining unsold) are now subject to or affected by, under or in consequence of the same indenture, and so as to give effect to, but so as not to multiply or increase, any charge subsisting under that indenture or thereby authorised to be created."

(a) See Mathias v. Mathias, 3 Sm. & G. 552; Price v. Blakemore, 6 Beav. 507, and see post, Chap. xxx. s. 2.

[(b) Re Pumfrey, 22 Ch. D. 255.]

Directions for settlement.

32. It has hitherto been assumed that the directions for the limitations in the settlement are clear in themselves, but it often happens that the trustees are involved in considerable perplexity from the ambiguity of the language in which the directions are given. We have to some extent anticipated this subject in a former page, under the general head of "executory trusts" (which comprise trusts for purchase and settlement) (a), but some further observations may here be introduced, with reference to the particular branch of the executory trusts now under consideration.

Impeachment for waste.

33. When trustees have to settle the estate upon a person for life with remainders over or in strict settlement, the question at once suggests itself whether the tenant for life is or not to be made impeachable for waste. The primâ facie rule appears to be that he shall (b), but there are important exceptions. Thus, where a larger estate than for life is given in the first instance, but it is afterwards cut down by directions for a strict settlement, the Court does not consider itself justified in reducing the interest first taken beyond the clear intention, but limits a life estate without impeachment for waste (a). Again, where a testator directed a settlement to be made on A. and the heirs of his body (which would have left him tenant in tail), and then added that "it was never to be in the power of A. to dock the entail during his life," A. was declared to be tenant for life without impeachment of waste (b). And the like construction prevailed where a testator constituted A. "his heir," but desired that it should "be secured for the benefit of A.'s family" (c). Again, where a testator directed the property to be "closely entailed," the Court cut it down to a tenancy for life with remainder to the issue, but exempted the tenant for life from impeachment for waste (d).

(a) See ante, p. 118.

"To be strictly settled."

34. In another case, where the direction was that the estate should be "strictly settled," the limitation to the tenant for life was without impeachment for waste (e), and V. C. Wood observed, with reference to this decision, that it was sustainable on the ground that the term "strict settlement" without more was understood in accordance with the common form of such instruments to imply estates for life without impeachment of waste (f).

Concurrence of all the cestuis que trust.

35. If the parties beneficially interested are under no disability and can agree together as to the disposition of the fund before investment or of the estate after investment, the trustees will be bound to obey their joint wishes, and must deal with the property in the manner directed by their joint order.

CHAPTER XX.

DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

UNDER this head we shall treat,—First, Of the validity of a trust for payment of debts; Secondly, What creditor deeds are revocable; and Thirdly, Of the duties of trustees for payment of debts.

SECTION I.

OF THE VALIDITY OF THE TRUST.

1. A TRUST for payment of debts may be created either by will or by act inter vivos.

Validity of a trust for payment of debts.

2. A trust created by will for payment of debts out of personal estate is so far a nullity, that the executor is bound, at all events, to provide for the payment of debts out of the assets in a due course of administration, and would not be justified in the breach of this legal obligation by pleading any expression of intention on the part of the testator. It is only as respects any surplus personal estate after payment of debts that the executor ought to regulate his administration by the directions of the will. A devise, however, of real estate for payment of debts is in all cases unimpeachable, for the statutes that have avoided devises as against specialty creditors (a), and now as against simple contract creditors (b), have expressly excepted devises for payment of debts.

Trust created by act inter vivos attended with fraud.

3. As to trusts created by act inter vivos, a trust for payment of debts will in all cases be void, if vitiated by actual fraud, as if the debtor by an understanding between him and his trustees be left in possession of the estate so as to obtain a fictitious credit (c).

Person not a trader might create trust for payment of debts.

4. Under the old bankruptcy laws, a broad distinction was made between non-traders and traders. If the settlor was not a trader he was not amenable to the bankrupt laws, and therefore was at perfect liberty to dispose either of the whole (a) or of part of his property (b), for payment of all (c), or any number of his creditors (d). The argument formerly urged for the invalidity of such a trust was that 13 Eliz. c. 5 (e) avoided "all alienations contrived of fraud, to delay creditors and others of their just debts," &c. But with respect to a trust for the satisfaction of creditors generally—"How," said Le Blanc, J., "can it be fraudulent for a person not the object of the bankrupt laws to make the same provision voluntarily for the benefit of all his creditors which the law compels to be done in the case of a bankrupt trader?" (f); and if the settlor direct the payment of particular debts only, "It is neither illegal nor immoral," said Lord Kenyon, "to prefer one set of creditors to another" (g). Nor did the creation of such a trust fall within the scope of the Act; for "it is not every feoffment, judgment, &c.," said Lord Ellenborough, "which will have the effect of delaying or hindering creditors of their debts, &c., that is therefore fraudulent within the statute; for such is the effect pro tanto of every assignment that can be made by one who has creditors: every assignment of a man's property, however good and honest the consideration, must diminish the fund out of which satisfaction is to be made to his creditors. But the feoffment, judgment, &c., must be devised of malice, fraud, or the like, to bring it within the statute: the Act was meant to prevent deeds, &c., fraudulent in the concoction, and not merely such as in their effect might delay or hinder other creditors" (a).

Fraudulent conveyance.

5. If the settlor was a trader, then by 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, s. 67 (being a re-enactment of the previous statutes), it was declared that "any fraudulent conveyance, with intent to defeat or delay creditors, should be deemed an act of bankruptcy;" and it was adjudged fraudulent within the meaning of this clause, if a person assigned the whole of his property (b) (whether expressed to be the whole or not in the deed (c)), or all but a colourable part (d), or all the stock, without which he could not carry on his trade (e).

Grounds of the rule.

6. It was immaterial whether the trust was for any particular creditor (f), or a certain number of them (g), or all the creditors at large (h), for by the assignment of his whole substance the bankrupt became utterly insolvent; and if the trust was for one or some only of his creditors, it was a fraud upon the rest, and if it was for all the creditors, it was a fraud upon the spirit of the bankruptcy laws, which require a bankrupt's estate to be under

But see the recent case of Ex parte Gass, 2 Ir. R. Eq. 284, in which it was held (though the decision rested on other grounds), that the question of fraud is one of fact, and therefore if under the peculiar circumstances the Court is satisfied that the conveyance of the bankrupt's whole property was bonâ fide, and with a view to pay his creditors rather than to defeat them, the deed will be supported.

the management of certain commissioners and assignees appointed as prescribed by the legislature—not of persons nominated by the debtor himself, and so more likely to further his views than promote the interest of the creditors (a).

Where deed could be supported.

7. But in order to avoid the deed, there must have been in existence a debt due at the time of its execution (b); and the assignment, though void as against creditors and the assignees in bankruptcy (c), was good as between the parties themselves (d). And assignments for valuable consideration at the full price, where the purchaser was not party or privy to the fraudulent designs of the vendor (e), or for less than the full price, if the transaction was bonâ fide (f), and mortgages made bonâ fide for fresh advances (g), or to secure payment of old debts and further advances combined (h), were not acts of bankruptcy and could not be impeached; and a conveyance and assignment by a trader bonâ fide of all his property substantially to trustees upon trust to convert into money and hold the proceeds upon trust for the settlor, or his appointees, was not an act of bankruptcy (i).

What concomitant circumstances would not vary the rule.

8. A fraudulent deed was an act of bankruptcy, notwithstanding a proviso declaring it void if the trustees thought fit (j), or if all the creditors should not execute (the acts of the trustees to be good in the meantime) (k); or if all the creditors to a certain amount should not execute by such a time, or a commission of bankruptcy should issue (l). So it was an act of bankruptcy, though the trustees at the time of the execution of the deed did not intend to act upon it (for the fraud was to be referred to the animus of the trader) (m); and though the trustees induced the debtor to execute it, with the object of making it an act of bankruptcy (n); and though the debtor himself meant it to be taken as an act of bankruptcy (o).

No act of bankruptcy, if deed could not be enforced.

9. But if A., B., and C. agreed to execute an assignment as a joint transaction, and A. executed, but B. and C. refused, then, as the assignment of A. was made on the footing and faith of B. and C.'s concurrence, and therefore could not be enforced against A. individually and solely, it was no act of bankruptcy (a).

Assignment executed abroad.

10. An assignment executed abroad was at one time held to be no act of bankruptcy in England (b); but in this respect the law has been altered by statute (c).

Creditors concurring or acquiescing could not treat it as an act of bankruptcy.

11. If any creditors either concurred in the assignment (d), or subsequently acquiesced in it (e), they could not afterwards treat it as an act of bankruptcy, for it was not fraudulent as to them. And a trust deed, which as concurred or acquiesced in by all the creditors could not have been impeached under a fiat sued out by a creditor, could not be impeached under the bankrupt's own fiat (f).

Trader might assign part in trust for his creditors.

12. If a person assigned part only of his property in trust for creditors, then, if the transaction was fair and bonâ fide, and in the ordinary course of business, or upon the pressure of the creditors, it was not open to objection (g); but if the settlor contemplated bankruptcy (h), or even thought it probable, though not inevitable (i), and wished to give an undue preference to certain creditors over others, it was fraudulent, and constituted an act of bankruptcy.

Unless he contemplated bankruptcy.

Assent or acquiescence.

13. Although the deed was void for any reason at law, yet it might be supported in equity as to creditors who had assented to it, or acquiesced in it, though without actual execution (a).

Where trust valid, the terms must be strictly observed.

14. On the other hand, a creditor was not bound by the arrangement but might recover his whole debt, if the terms of the composition were not strictly and literally fulfilled; for cujus est dare ejus est disponere, and the creditor has a right to prescribe the conditions of his indulgence (b).

[Resulting trust of surplus.]

[15. The question whether, under a trust deed in favour of creditors, there is a resulting trust for the settlor is one of intention. In a recent case where the business and property of a firm were assigned to trustees upon trust to carry on the business, or sell and dispose of the assets, and pay and divide the clear residue of the profits and moneys among the creditors in rateable proportions, it was held by the House of Lords (reversing the decision of the Court of Appeal) that by the form of the deed there was no resulting trust of any possible surplus in favour of the assignors (c).

[Bankruptcy Act, 1883.]

16. By the Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71, which repealed 12 & 13 Vict. c. 106, and the subsequent Bankruptcy Act of 1861), the law of bankruptcy was put upon a new footing. But this Act has itself been repealed by the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (d), which has again introduced a new law of bankruptcy. All persons, whether traders or otherwise, are now amenable to the bankruptcy laws. By the 4th section of the late Act the following acts (amongst others) are made acts of bankruptcy, viz.:—

[Acts of bankruptcy.]

1. That the debtor has in England or elsewhere made a conveyance or assignment of his property to a trustee or trustees for the benefit of his creditors generally.

2. That the debtor has in England or elsewhere made a fraudulent conveyance, gift, delivery, or transfer of his property, or any part thereof.

3. That the debtor has in England or elsewhere made any conveyance or transfer of his property or any part thereof, or created any charge thereon which would under that or any other

[(d) 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52.]

Act be void as a fraudulent preference if he were adjudged bankrupt (a).

[Limitation of time.]

But by the 6th section a creditor is not to be entitled to present a bankruptcy petition against a debtor unless the act of bankruptcy has occurred within three months before the presentation of the petition for adjudication. Until the expiration, therefore, of these three months the trustees of a creditors' deed must forbear to act, or their proceedings may be overridden by a subsequent adjudication of bankruptcy. However, the trustees may begin the exercise of their office at an earlier day if they can only satisfy themselves either that all the creditors have concurred or acquiesced in the deed, or that such as have not cannot either collectively or individually prove a debt or debts in the requisite amount to support an adjudication of bankruptcy.

If the trustees of a creditors' deed take possession of the debtor's property and carry on his business under the provisions of the deed, and the debtor is subsequently adjudicated a bankrupt on the act of bankruptcy committed by the execution of the deed, the trustee in the bankruptcy must elect whether he will treat the trustee of the deed as a trespasser or as his agent (b).]

Now that the distinction between traders and non-traders has substantially been abolished, what before was a fraudulent conveyance as to traders only, will be a fraudulent conveyance as to non-traders also (c).

SECTION II.

WHAT CREDITORS' DEEDS ARE REVOCABLE.

Irrevocable trusts.

1. THE existence of a debt is always a sufficient consideration to support an assurance as valid and irrevocable as against the grantor (d); indeed the assurance will almost always assume the form either of a conveyance in satisfaction or part satisfaction of

[(a) As to what constitutes a fraudulent preference under the Act, see sect. 48.]

[(b) Ex parte Vaughan, 14 Q. B. D. 25.]

(d) See Rice v. Rice, 2 Drew. 84. But a conveyance by way of security from a debtor to his creditor, where there is no pressure, may be a fraudulent preference within the meaning of the Bankruptcy Acts; Goodricke v. Taylor, 2 H. & M. 380; and, if the debtor's whole property be included, an act of bankruptcy; Ex parte Trevor, 1 Ch. D. 297; [and see 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, s. 48.]

the debt (in which case the extinction or partial extinction of the debt forms the consideration), or of a security accompanied with a forbearance to sue (a). Thus if A. be indebted to B., and convey an estate to him by way of security, the deed, though no money passed at the time, and there was no previous arrangement, cannot be revoked by A., but B. may insist on the benefit of it (b). And if the creditor be not a party to the deed, yet if, by arrangement between him and the debtor, an estate is vested in a trustee for securing the debt, he can enforce the trust (c). Even where a debtor entered into an arrangement with three of his creditors, and in pursuance thereof, by a deed between himself of the first part, the three creditors of the second part, and his other creditors of the third part, conveyed all his real and personal estate to the three creditors, in trust for themselves and the other creditors, it was held that the intention was to make the creditors cestuis que trust, and that the deed was irrevocable; and no distinction was taken between the three creditors and the other creditors, although the latter apparently had not been in communication with the debtor previous to the deed, and had not executed it until some time afterwards (d).

Revocable trusts.

2. On the other hand, if a debtor, without communication with his creditors, and, indeed, only from motives of personal convenience, as on going abroad (e), vest an estate in trustees upon trust to pay his debts, the trustees are mere mandatories, and the deed confers no right upon the creditors who are neither parties nor privies, and the debtor may at any time, at his pleasure, revoke or vary the trusts, or call for the re-transfer of the property (f). And if two persons have different interests in the same estate, and they, by arrangement between themselves, but without communication with any creditor, convey the property to trustees, upon trust to pay the debts of either party, here, though each may enforce the trust as against the other, yet the deed is revocable by both, and the creditor, as he neither required the security, nor was an object of bounty, cannot, while the deed remains revocable, compel the execution of the trust in his own favour (a). And à fortiori, this is the case if the payment of the debt is to be made only on the request of the settlor (b). But, of course, the trust cannot be revoked by the settlor, so as to defeat or prejudice what the trustees may have done previously in the due execution of the trust (c).

(a) It has been suggested, however, that a mere agreement to give a mortgage for a bygone debt, unaccompanied by any express stipulation as to forbearance, cannot be enforced. See Crofts v. Feuge, 4 Ir. Ch. Rep. 316; Woodroffe v. Johnson, 4 Ir. Ch. Rep. 319.

Garrard v. Lauderdale.

3. In Garrard v. Lauderdale, the Duke of York, by indenture between himself of the first part, trustees of the second part, and the creditors of the third part, conveyed certain property to trustees upon trust for his creditors, and upon the execution of the deed a circular to that effect was sent to each of the creditors. Here there was ground for contending that, as the creditors had been induced by the notice to forbear suing the settlor, they had acquired a right to the execution of the trust, but Sir L. Shadwell, observing that the receipt of the circular was not admitted, and that, if received, yet the creditors had not refrained from suing, as they had proved in an administration suit against the Duke's estate, decided that the creditors had no equity to enforce the trust (d), and the decree, on appeal to Lord Brougham, was affirmed (e). The authority, however, of this case has, on several occasions, been questioned (f); and Lord St. Leonards observed he should be sorry to have it understood that a man may create a trust for creditors, communicate it to them, and obtain from them the benefit of their lying by until perhaps the legal right to sue was lost, and then insist that the trust was wholly within his power (g). There can be little doubt that upon the general principles of equity the settlor, by giving notice to the trustees, and by subsequent conduct, may confer on the creditors a right which they did not originally possess (h); and indeed it has now

(g) Brown v. Cavendish, 1 Jon. & Lat. 635; 7 Ir. Eq. Rep. 388.

(h) Perhaps the old case of Langton v. Tracy, 2 Ch. Rep. 30, was decided on this principle, for it appears that Tracy, the trustee, declared to been decided that if property be assigned to a trustee, and he takes possession of it, and communicates with certain of the creditors, who express their satisfaction, the trust is irrevocable (a).

[Where ultimate trust irrevocable.]

[The doctrine of Garrard v. Lauderdale was held not to apply where the deed contained an ultimate trust for the wife and children of the settlor (b).]

Trustee one of the creditors.

4. If the trustee be himself a creditor, the debt forms a sufficient consideration on behalf of the creditor, and the deed is irrevocable (c); and in one case, where property was vested in a trustee for creditors, and the trustee was a surety for some of the debts, it was held that, though the trust was revocable as to the general creditors, yet the trustee himself was not bound to reconvey the estate until the suretyship was satisfied (d).

Nature of the revocable trust.

5. It does not clearly appear from the authorities what is the precise nature of a revocable trust of this kind. The instrument is sometimes called a deed of agency, and if so, the trust must be considered at an end at the death of the settlor, and the property, so far as it has not been applied, must be administered as part of the settlor's assets (e). The trust is not regarded as revocable only during the life of the settlor, so as to give a vested interest to the creditor after his death, for it has been held that the creditor has no more equity to enforce the trust after a settlor's death than in his lifetime (f).

Voluntary trust.

6. Suppose there is no fraud, but the trust deed is a mere voluntary settlement not founded on any arrangement with the creditors, but for the mere convenience of the debtor himself, so that it is revocable by the debtor at any time until communicated to some creditor (g)—in that case can a creditor, taking out execution, levy his debt upon the property subject to the trust? It the creditors that he would pay the debts, and that some of the debts were actually paid under the deed. The creditors may also have been privies, though not parties, to the execution of the trust, for it is stated that the settlor executed the deed to avoid prosecution against him by his creditors.

seems, though the deed is voluntary, yet it is not to be considered as fraudulent within the statute 13 Eliz. c. 5, and if so, the creditor cannot reach the property at law (a). However, the deed might perhaps be held to be invalid as against the creditor in a Court of equity (b).

[7. It has now been decided that the doctrine of revocability does not apply to provisions in favour of creditors or mortgagees which do not come into operation until after the death of the settlor (c).] [Post obit trusts.]

8. The Courts at the present day consider the doctrine under which these deeds have been held revocable to have been carried far enough, and have expressed a disinclination to extend it (d). Doctrine not likely to be extended.

SECTION III.

OF THE DUTIES OF TRUSTEES FOR PAYMENT OF DEBTS.

Upon this subject we shall consider, First, What debts are to be paid; Secondly, In what order as regards priority; and Thirdly, What interest is to be allowed. Duties of trustees.

First. What debts are within the scope of the trust.

1. If the trust be created by deed, then, unless a contrary intention be expressed, the debts only at the date of the deed will be intended (e); but if the provision be contained in a will, the direction will include all debts at the testator's death; unless he specially restrict his meaning to the debts at the making of his will (f). Debts to be paid are primâ facie those at date of deed or death of testator.

2. Where a settlor by deed conveyed all his real and personal property upon trust to pay "all debts then owing by him, and which affected the estates thereby conveyed;" the trust, as the settlor had no judgment debts at the time, was extended to bond debts, but not to simple contract debts (g). But this distinction "Debts affecting the estate."

was taken upon a deed dated before the Acts making real estates assets for payment of simple contract debts.

Father providing for debts of son.

In another case a testator directed his trustees to apply 1000*l.* in releasing his son from his liabilities, should the testator not have done so in his lifetime. The son was an uncertificated bankrupt, and the Court considering that debts subsequently to the testator's death were not contemplated, discharged the debts up to that period out of the 1000*l.*, and gave the surplus to the testator's residuary legatee (a).

Debts barred by the Statute of Limitations.

3. A general direction for payment of debts will not revive a debt barred by the Statute of Limitations (b), though the trustee or executor may have advertised for all creditors to come in and prove their debts (c); and, if a debt might with due diligence have been established, but there has been laches which under ordinary circumstances would be a bar to relief, the mere fact of the creation and existence of a trust for payment of debts will not justify the laches and enable the claimant to obtain relief (d). But a will may be so specially worded as to create a trust for creditors generally, notwithstanding any bar from the Statute of Limitations, for the debts still subsist though the remedy is gone (e); and if there be a debt in fact not barred at the date of the deed, or at the death of the testator, the statute will not run afterwards (f); for it is not to be inferred that a man abandons his debt because he does not enforce payment at law when he has a trustee to pay him (g). Besides, unless delayed of necessity, the trustee ought to discharge the debt at once, and the universal rule is, that the cestui que trust ought not to suffer for the laches of the trustee (h). If a testator create a trust for payment of the debts of another person deceased, the debts to be

Where real and personal estate are given together upon trust for sale and conversion and payment of debts thereout, the period of limitation as to the real estate will be twelve years (c).] [Blended fund.]

4. If a person who has been a bankrupt direct payment of twenty shillings in the pound upon the debts proved in the bankruptcy, the creditors are legatees, and pay legacy duty, but there is no lapse though a creditor die in the testator's lifetime (d). Legacy duty.

5. Where a testatrix had devised an estate to trustees upon trust to sell and pay debts, but no part of the produce of sale had been set apart for that purpose, the right of the creditor was held by the late V. C. of England not to be within the exception of the 25th section of the Statute of Limitations, 3 & 4 W. 4. c. 27, but to fall under the 40th section; but that inasmuch as the debt had been acknowledged by the surviving trustee, the case was taken out of the statute (e). However, the opinion of the Vice-Chancellor that the case was not within the 25th section would not, it is thought, now prevail, but the right of the creditor would subsist until adverse possession had run against his trustee (f). Statute of Limitations.

6. The rule that the creation of a trust keeps alive a debt not barred at the testator's death does not apply to a trust declared of personal estate by will, for the personalty vests in the executor upon trust for the creditors by act of law, so that the words of the will are nugatory (g). As regards testator's personalty.

7. The terms of the trust will extend to the repayment of a sum of money borrowed by the settlor when an infant for the purchase of necessaries (h). Debt contracted by infant for necessaries.

debt be allowed to prove and receive a dividend upon the whole amount of his debt pari passu with the other creditors, or shall he prove only for the excess of the debt beyond the value of the security, or what rule is to govern the case? In bankruptcy, the mortgagee proves only for the excess of the mortgage debt over the value of the security, so that he must first dispose of the estate (with the concurrence, if he has no power of sale, of the trustee in bankruptcy) [or assess the value of it,] and then prove for the difference. In the administration of assets in Courts of equity, a mortgagee [was until recently] allowed to prove for his whole debt without being put on terms as to his security (a); [but by the Judicature Act, 1875 (b), the rule in equity has in insolvent estates been assimilated to that in bankruptcy.] A trust deed for creditors usually provides for the case of persons having specific liens, and ingrafts the principle established in bankruptcy. If there be no such clause, and if the deed provide that the creditor shall release his debt and all securities for the same, the mortgagee, by executing the deed, binds himself to the other creditors, notwithstanding any private arrangement with the debtor to the contrary, that he will not take advantage of his specific lien, but will bring it into the common stock and prove for his whole debt, and accept a dividend pari passu with the rest (c). "The moment," observed Lord Lyndhurst, "a creditor releases his debt, which he does by executing a deed of this kind, there is, of course, an end of any lien he may have for it" (d). But though the word "release" be used in the deed, it will not necessarily operate as an absolute and unconditional release, if the whole contents of the instrument, when taken together, show that such was not the intention (e).

Trust for creditors who come in within certain time.

9. It was held in Dunch v. Kent (f) that where there is a trust for payment of such creditors as shall come in within a year, a

[By 38 & 39 Vict. c. 77, s. 10, the rule in bankruptcy has been adopted both in administrations of insolvent estates in Courts of Equity and in liquidations under the Companies Acts, 1862 & 1867, of joint stock companies. By the Bankruptcy Acts, 1883, s. 125, and 1890, s. 21, the estate of a person dying insolvent can now be administered in bankruptcy.]

creditor who delays beyond the year is not therefore precluded from taking advantage of the trust; and in Raworth v. Parker (a), V. C. Wood, after observing that there was no modern authority in which relief had been given after the time fixed for the execution of the deed had expired, added, that if it were to be held that creditors are not admissible after the prescribed period, Dunch v. Kent must be overruled. And in a more recent case, where the trust was for the benefit of creditors who should execute or accede within three months, the Vice-Chancellor held, and the decision was affirmed by the Lord-Chancellor on appeal, that a creditor who had not acceded within the prescribed time might claim the benefit of the trust (b).

Adoption of deeds.

10. It is not necessary that a creditor, to entitle himself to the benefit of the deed, should execute it, but it will be sufficient if he assent to it, or acquiesce in it, or act upon its provisions, and comply with its terms (c). But the creditor must do some act to testify his acceptance of the deed, and not merely stand by and remain passive (d).

Disputed debt.

11. If the trustees permit a person to sign the deed as creditor in a certain sum specified in the schedule, they cannot afterwards contest the debt (e). But where there has been fraud, forgery, or perjury by the creditor, the trustees can apply to the Court to have the execution by the creditor set aside (f).

Trustee cannot arbitrarily admit a creditor who has repudiated the deed.

12. A creditor who repudiates the deed by his acts, as by suing the debtor contrary to the provisions of the deed, will not be allowed afterwards (more particularly after a long lapse of time) to retrace his steps and take the benefit of the deed; and though the trustees should admit him to sign the deed, the other creditors will not be bound by the act of the trustees (g).

C. in affirming the judgment of the V. C. said that he considered the doctrine of the Court, since Dunch v. Kent, to have been that a creditor might come in after the time prescribed, and that the time was not of the essence of the deed, and that, in his opinion, the view of Dunch v. Kent originally taken in Raworth v. Parker by V. C. Wood was the correct one.

Discretion in trustees to admit creditors' claims.

13. A discretion is sometimes given to the trustees to admit or exclude such creditors as they shall think proper. The Court will endeavour, if possible, to withdraw the rights of the creditors from the caprice of the trustees (a); but if the settlement clearly give such a discretionary power, and the trustees are willing to exercise it, and no fraud be found, the Court cannot interfere to compel the admission of any particular creditor (b).

Relief in equity.

14. If the trustees have power of enlarging the time and advertise to that effect, but do not exercise the power, and so exclude a person who desires to come in, but could not do so before the day named in the deed, the creditor will be relieved in equity (c).

Resumption by trustees of possession after parting with it.

15. If there be trustees for payment of debts and legacies, and subject thereto upon trust for A. for life with remainder over, and the Court has taken an account of debts and legacies, and declared A. entitled to the possession, who is put into possession accordingly, it is not competent for the trustees afterwards to make an admission of some further debt, and to resume the possession in order to discharge it (d).

Secret agreements.

16. If the debtor agree behind the back of the general creditors, to give an extra benefit to one particular creditor, such agreement is a fraud upon the general creditors, and illegal and void (e).

[A creditors' deed, or composition deed which some creditors have been induced to execute by means of a secret bargain for an additional payment to them, is void as against any creditor who was not aware of the bargain when he executed the deed (f), even though the payment be made at the expense of a third party, and the secret bargain be made after the execution of the deed by the creditor who challenges it, provided the bargain be made with the debtor's knowledge (g).]

[Deeds of Arrangement Act, 1887.]

(otherwise than in pursuance of the law for the time being in force relating to bankruptcy), that is to say, an assignment of property (a)—a deed of or agreement for a composition," and certain other instruments in cases where creditors of a debtor obtain any control over his property or business. A deed of arrangement is to be void, unless registered within seven clear days after the first execution thereof by the debtor or any creditor, where the execution takes place in England or Ireland (b). The Act prescribes the manner of registration, and constitutes the Registrar of Bills of Sale in England and Ireland respectively registrar for the purposes of the Act (c); and in England, the Bills of Sale Department of the Central Office of the Supreme Court of Judicature is the office for registration. Under this Act Rules of Court have been made for the purpose of carrying the Act into effect.]

Secondly. As to the order of payment.

Creditors paid before legatees.

1. Where the trust is created by will, the direction generally is for payment of "debts and legacies." As regards the administration of assets, creditors take precedence of legatees; but here, as both take under the will, and the testator has made no distinction, it seems upon strict principle, as was formerly held, that creditors and legatees ought to be paid pari passu (d). However, there can be little doubt that the testator, although he may not have explicitly declared it, meant the creditors to precede, and the Courts accordingly (rather straining a point, that a man might not "sin in his grave") have now indisputably established that creditors shall have the priority (e).

All creditors to be paid pari passu.

2. As amongst the creditors themselves, the Court acts upon the well-known principle that "equality is equity," and, therefore, whether the trust be created by deed (f) or will (g), the specialty debts in the absence of express directions to the contrary will have no advantage over simple contract debts, but all will be paid in rateable proportions; and, of course, the trustees will not be allowed to break in upon the rule of equality by first discharging their own debts (a).

Specialty creditors.

3. It was formerly ruled, that where a testator charged his freehold estates with debts, and the estate subject to the charge, descended to the heir, the specialty creditor had precedence, for it was argued that he had his remedy at law against the heir independently of the will, and therefore ought not to be put on a level with those taking under the will (b). The answer is, that the specialty creditor has no lien upon the estate, but can only recover the debt from the heir personally to the extent of the assets descended. If the estate be subject to the charge the heir takes not beneficially but only as trustee, and then there are no legal assets in consideration of equity, and the bond creditor may be enjoined from pursuing his legal right. And on these grounds it was decided that specialty debts are not entitled to a preference (c).

Case of trustee being also executor.

4. It was also thought at one time, that if the estate charged with the debts was to be administered by the executor, the testator must have meant that the executor should, as in his executorial capacity, observe the legal priorities (d); however, there was no reason, in fact, why the characters of trustee and executor should not be united in the same person without confusion, and so it has since been determined (e). But where the trust was expressly to pay the settlor's debts "according to their priority, nature, and specialty," a bond debt with interest was payable before a simple contract debt (f). But now, since 32 and 33 Vict. c. 46, all debts of persons who may have died on or after 1st January, 1870, are payable pari passu.

own benefit, but will be divisible amongst the unpaid creditors who do claim (a).

Thirdly. As to allowance of interest.

Interest not allowed on simple contract debts.

1. Whether the trust be created by deed (b), or will (c), and though the fund has been making interest (d), the trustees will not be justified in paying interest upon simple contract debts not carrying interest; and à fortiori, this is the case where interest is expressly directed as to some particular debts (e). Where the trust was by deed, but the creditors had not been made parties, Lord Eldon observed, "The mere direction to pay a debt does not infer either contract or trust to pay interest upon debts by simple contract. As to contract, the creditors did not execute the deed, and there was nothing to prevent their suing the debtor after the execution; and no consideration was given to the debtor by charging the land and discharging the person" (f). Even where the debts did in their nature carry interest, and the direction in a will was to pay "the debts owing by the testatrix's brother at the time of his death," but forty years had elapsed since the death of the brother, so that the interest if allowed would have amounted to more than double the principal, the Court thought the direction could not have been intended to include interest as well as principal (g).

The trust deed does not make the debts specialties.

2. It was once suggested by Lord Abinger that "if a man execute a trust of a term for the benefit of his creditors, the deed makes them mortgages if they execute it, and so gives them a right to interest" (h); and it was held in some old authorities, that even in a deed to which the creditors were not parties, or in a trust created by will for payment of debts, the creditors were to be regarded as mortgagees and were entitled to interest (i); but the doctrine in the latter cases has long since been overthrown, and it is apprehended that the distinction taken by the Chief Baron cannot at the present day be supported (a). Again, it was said by Lord Hardwicke that "if a man by deed in his life creates a trust for payment of his debts, annexes a schedule of some debts, and creates a trust term for the payment, as that is in the nature of a specialty, it will make these, though simple contract debts, carry interest" (b). But this dictum also is not in conformity with the law as now established and cannot be maintained (c).

Pearce v. Slocombe.

3. But where A. and B. assigned their joint property to C., D., and E. upon trust, in the first place to pay the joint debts at the expiration of a year from the date of the assignment, and then as to a moiety to pay the separate debts of A., and at the end of a year sufficient assets were realized to have discharged the joint debts, but the money, instead of being so applied, was invested in the funds and the interest accumulated, it was held, that as the fund applicable to the payment of the joint debts had been making interest from the time the debts should have been paid, the joint creditors, though on simple contract, were entitled to interest at 4 per cent. before the separate creditors were paid their principal. The separate creditors would otherwise try to impede the general settlement, in order that, in the meantime, they might enjoy the interest from the joint creditor's fund (d).

Creditors may stipulate for interest.

4. The creditors may stipulate for payment of interest, or the settlor, if so minded, may insert such a direction (e). But a trust for payment of specialty and simple contract debts and all interest thereof, will not amount to such a direction, but the words will be taken to have reference to the debts carrying interest of their own nature (f).

Specialty debts.

5. Specialty debts, though actually released by a creditors' deed, will carry interest up to the time of payment. It might be urged, indeed, that as regards specialty debts the amount of the debt is the principal and interest; and therefore in a trust for payment of debts interest as well as principal must be taken into calculation to ascertain what the debt is at the date of the deed or the death of the testator; but that interest ought not to run beyond the date of the trust deed or the death of the testator, for that principal and interest together are then regarded as one sum, not as a debt but the claim of a cestui que trust. And some principle of this kind appears to have been acted upon in the case of Car v. Burlington (a), where a person vested estates in trustees upon trust to pay all such debts as he should owe at his death, and the Court directed the master to calculate interest on such of the debts as carried interest up to the death of the settlor; but the Master was not to carry on any interest on any security beyond the settlor's decease, but in case there were assets to pay the simple contract debts as well as the specialty debts, the question of ulterior interest was reserved. At the present day, however, the rule is to consider the specialty debt as subsisting up to the time of payment, i.e., to calculate interest on the principal not only up to the date of the deed or the death of the testator, but up to the day of payment (b).

(a) Barwell v. Parker, 2 Ves. 364. It must be borne in mind, however, that the practice of the Court in the Chancery Division gives simple contract creditors a right to interest from the date of the decree out of any surplus assets after paying all debts, and the interest of such as by law carry interest; see Rules of Supreme Court, Ord. 55, R. 63.

Bond creditors not entitled to interest beyond the penalty.

6. Bond creditors, it must be observed, will in no case be entitled to receive more for principal and interest than the amount of the penalty (c).

CHAPTER XXI.

THE DUTIES OF TRUSTEES OF CHARITIES.

1. CHARITIES may either be established by charter, as eleemosynary corporations, or may be placed under the management of individual trustees.

Charities by charter.

2. Before entering upon the duties of trustees for charities, it may be proper to introduce a few preliminary remarks upon the subject of the Court's (a) jurisdiction over charities established by charter.

Visitor.

3. On the institution of such a charity a visitatorial jurisdiction arises of common right to the founder (whether the Crown or a private person), or to those whom the founder has substituted in the place of himself (b); and the office of visitor is to hear and determine all differences of the members of the society amongst themselves, and generally to superintend the internal government of the body, and to see that all rules and orders of the corporation are observed (c). The visitor must take as his guide the statutes originally propounded by the founder (d); but so long as he does not exceed his proper province, his decision is final, and cannot be questioned by way of appeal (e).

Jurisdiction of the Court over corporate bodies.

4. With this visitatorial power the Court has nothing to do: it is only as respects the administration of the corporate property that equity assumes to itself any right of interference (f).

Informal election.

Mal-administration.

5. Upon the ground of this distinction between the visitatorial power and the management of the revenue, an information for the removal of governors or other corporators, as having been irregularly appointed, would be dismissed with costs (a); but wherever the administration of the property by the governors can be shown to have a tendency to pervert the end of the institution, the Court will immediately interpose, and put a stop to such wrongful application (b).

How property newly given is affected by the visitatorial power.

6. An estate newly bestowed upon an old corporation is not to be regarded in the same light as property with which the charity was originally endowed. The visitatorial power is forum domesticum—the private jurisdiction of the founder; and the new gift will not be made subject to it, unless the will of the donor be either actually expressed to that effect, or is to be collected by necessary implication (c). If a legal or equitable interest be given to a body corporate, and no special purpose be declared, the donor has plainly implied that the estate shall be under the general statutes and rules of the society, and be regulated in the same manner as the rest of their property (d): but if a particular and special trust be annexed to the gift, that excludes the visitatorial power of the original founder; and the Court, viewing the corporation in the light of an ordinary trustee, will determine all the same questions as would have fallen under its jurisdiction had the administration of the fund been intrusted to the hands of individuals (e).

Private foundation with a charter.

7. Where a private person founds a charity, and then the Crown grants a charter, the presumption is that the Crown meant to carry out the founder's intentions, and the jurisdiction of the Court which existed before will be continued (a).

Cases where the visitatorial power may be exercised by the Lord Chancellor.

8. Even the visitatorial power may, under particular circumstances and in a special manner, be exercised by the Lord Chancellor; for the Crown may be visitor by the terms of the foundation; and, if the heir of the founder cannot be discovered (b), or become lunatic (c), the visitatorial power, rather than that the corporation should not be visited at all, will result to the Crown. And while in civil corporations the Crown is visitor through [the High Court of Justice (d)]; (for corporate bodies which respect the public policy of the country and the administration of justice, are necessarily better regulated under the superintendence of a Court of law:) yet, as regards eleemosynary corporations, the Crown's visitatorial power is committed to the Lord Chancellor, as in matters of charity the more appropriate supervisor (e). And the mode of application to the Lord Chancellor in these cases is by petition to the Great Seal (f).

We now proceed to the consideration of the duties of trustees of charities.

Fund must be applied to the charity prescribed.

9. It is of course imposed upon the trustees, whether individuals or a corporation, not to convert the charity fund to other uses than according to the intent of the founder or donor; so long as those uses are capable of execution (g). Thus if the gift be to find a preacher in Dale, it would be a breach of trust to provide

[(d) This visitatorial power was formerly exercised through the Court of Queen's Bench, but by 36 & 37 Vict. c. 66, the jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench was transferred to the High Court of Justice, and by s. 34 of that Act, matters which were formerly within the exclusive cognizance of the Court of Queen's Bench have been assigned to the Queen's Bench Division of the Court.]

one in Sale; if it be to find a preacher, it would be a breach of trust to apply it to the poor (a): if the trust be for the poor of O., it would be a breach of trust to extend it to other parishes (b): if the trust be to repair a chapel, the rents must not be mixed up with the poor-rate for parochial purposes (c): if a fund be raised for erecting a hospital, it cannot be diverted to lighting, paving, and cleansing the town (d).

Chapel for school.

10. A chapel was granted to the trustees of a school for the use and benefit of the said school, and though the inhabitants of the hamlet had been long accustomed to attend divine service in the chapel, it was held that, as the chapel was for the exclusive benefit of the school, the trustees had no power to apply the revenues of the charity towards enlarging the chapel for the better accommodation of the inhabitants (e).

Chapel pulled down.

11. The trustees for maintaining a chapel had pulled down the edifice, converted the burial ground to profane purposes, carried the bell to the market-place, put the pews in the parish church, and employed the stones of the chapel for repairing a bridge. Sir T. Plumer said, "It was an enormous breach of trust, and such as could not have been expected in a Christian country;" and directed an inquiry what emoluments had come to the hands of the trustees on account of the breach of trust, and what would be the expense of restoring the chapel to the state in which it stood at the time of its destruction (f).

Charity in aid of rates.

12. A fund in aid and relief of "poor citizens who often were grievously burdened by the imposts and taxes of the city" was held not to be applicable to the payment of rates and other expenses of the city that would otherwise have been raised by public levies and impositions; nor to be distributable to such of the poor as received parish relief, for that would be so much in aid of the ratepayers; but ought to have been administered for the exclusive benefit of the poor (g).

Poor of a parish.

13. Where a trust is created for the "poor of a parish," it was for a long time doubted what class of persons was entitled to the benefit. Lord Eldon thought, that the fund should be administered without reference to parochial relief; for assistance might be given to a pauper without exonerating the rich from their usual contribution to the rates—to the relief, which the law had provided, further relief might be added, which the parish was not bound to afford (a): besides, the appropriation of the fund to the poor not in receipt of parochial relief might still have the effect of conferring a benefit on the rich; for persons who could not otherwise have maintained themselves might, by means of the charity, be prevented from seeking assistance from the rate (b). However, it has been determined in several cases, and seems, therefore, to be now settled, that the charity must be confined to those not in receipt of parochial relief (c) (1).

But see Attorney-General v. Bovill, 1 Ph. 768, where Lord Cottenham is reported to have said, "I am inclined to think that the right course is, to administer the charity, and leave to chance to what extent it may operate to the relief of the poor-rates." The decree, however, seems in the main to be in accordance with the previous decisions; and see Attorney-General v. Blizard, 21 Beav. 233.

59 G. 3. c. 12.

(1) As to parish property; by the effect of the decisions on 59 Geo. 3. c. 12, s. 17, all hereditaments belonging to the parish at the time of the Act, or subsequently acquired, whether for a chattel (Alderman v. Neate, 4 M. & W. 704) or freehold interest, and though originally conveyed to express trustees for parish purposes, if it be unknown or uncertain in whom the legal estate is vested (Doe v. Hiley, 10 B. & C. 885; and see Churchwardens of Deptford v. Sketchley, 8 Q. B. 394), or generally where it is unascertained in whom the legal estate is outstanding, but the parish have exercised all the rights of ownership, and the property belongs to them in the popular sense (Doe v. Terry, 4 Ad. & Ell. 274; Doe v. Cockell, Ib. 478), are now transferred to the churchwardens and overseers of the parish, not indeed as a corporation and having a common seal (Ex parte Annesley, 2 Y. & C. 350), but as persons taking, by parliamentary succession, in the nature of a corporation (Smith v. Adkins, 8 M. & W. 362).

The Act does not extend to copyholds (Attorney-General v. Lewin, 8 Sim. 366; In re Paddington Charities, Ib. 629), nor to freeholds of which the trusts are not exclusively for the parish, but also embrace other objects (Allason v. Stark, 9 Ad. & Ell. 255; Attorney-General v. Lewin, 8 Sim. 366; In re Paddington Charities, Ib. 629); nor to lands vested in existing trustees, and who are actually in discharge of their duties in that character (Churchwardens of Deptford v. Sketchley, 8 Q. B. 394, overruling Rumball v. Munt, Ib. 382; and see Gouldsworth v. Knight, 11 M. & W. 337). However, though all the trusts must be for the parish, they may be directed to some special trust, if exclusively parochial, as a trust for aiding the church-rates (Doe v. Hiley, 10 B. & C. 855; Doe v. Terry, 4 Ad. & Ell. 274; and see Allason v. Stark, 9 Ad. & Ell. 266, 267; Doe v. Cockell, 4 Ad. & Ell. 478), or furnishing a poor-house (Alderman v. Neate, 4 M. & W. 704), or for the relief of the poor of the parish, whether the objects of the charity be or be not held to include those in the receipt of parochial relief; for if non-recipients only of parochial relief are to be admitted, the parish is still benefited by keeping that class of poor, by means of the charity, off the parish books (Ex parte Annesley, 2 Y. & C. 350; Churchwardens of Deptford v. Sketchley, 8 Q. B. 394).

Trust for maintaining "the worship of God."

14. If land or money be given for maintaining "the worship of God" (a), or the promotion of "Godly learning" (b), and nothing more is said, the Court will execute the trust in favour of the established form of religion; and dissenters cannot be appointed trustees (c). But though the trustees of a Church of England school must be members of the Established Church, it does not follow that the children of dissenters are not to be admitted into the school, or even that the master may not be a dissenter, though the latter appointment could only be justified by peculiar circumstances (d). If it be clearly expressed upon the deed or will that the purpose of the settlor is to promote the maintenance of dissenting doctrines, the Court, provided such doctrines be not contrary to law, will execute the intention (e).

Numerous contributors.

15. Where a fund has been raised for the purpose of founding a chapel or any other charity, and the contributors were so numerous as to preclude the possibility of their all concurring in any instrument declaring the trust, and a declaration of trust was made by the persons in whom the property was vested at or about the time when the sums were raised, that declaration may reasonably be taken primâ facie as a correct exposition of the minds of the contributors (f).

The trust originally intended will be preserved.

16. Where an institution exists for the purpose of religious worship, and it cannot be discovered from the instrument declaring the trust what form or species of religious worship was in the intention of the settlors, the Court will then inquire what has been the usage of the congregation; and, if such usage do not contravene public policy, will be guided by it as evidence of the intention in the administration of the trust. And by 7 & 8 Vict. c. 45, s. 2, if the instrument of trust do not in express terms, or by reference to some book or other document, define the religious doctrines, twenty-five years' usage immediately preceding any suit is made conclusive evidence thereof (g). But if the purpose of the settlors appear clearly upon the instrument, the Court, in that case, though the usage of the congregation may have run in a different channel, cannot change the nature of the original institution: it is not competent for the majority of the congregation, or for the managers of the property, to say, "We have altered our opinions: the chapel in future shall be for the benefit of persons of the same persuasion as ourselves" (a).

Appointment of new trustees.

17. If the deed of endowment neither provide for the succession of trustees nor the election of the minister, an inquiry will be directed, who, according to the nature of the establishment, are entitled to propose trustees, and to elect the minister (b); and if the election of the minister properly belong to the congregation, the majority is for that purpose the congregation (c). The appointment of the minister cannot, in such a case, belong to the heir of the surviving trustee, who may not be of the same persuasion, but, it might happen, a Roman Catholic or Jew (d).

Notices.

For the valid election of a minister due notice of the meeting for the purpose must be given, and no persons must take part in the proceedings who are not entitled to attend (e).

Minister of a meeting-house.

18. A minister in possession of a meeting-house is tenant at will to the trustees, and his estate is determinable by demand of possession without any previous notice (f) But this merely tries the legal right without affecting the question whether in equity the minister was properly deprived (g), and if the minister be in possession, and preaching the doctrines that were intended by the founders, it is the practice of a Court of Equity to continue him until the case can be heard, whether he was duly elected or not (for the first point is to have the service performed), and the Court will pay him his salary (h).
